Boy's Club Organize

The boys Club in St. Peter's Church was re-organized on Monday evening with the following officers:
Hon. Pres. Rev. Dr. MacTavish
Mentor—Dr. Wyper
Pres.—Erskine Jenkins
Vice Pres.—Mark Bong
Sec. Treas.—Fred Allen
The boys have undertaken to distribute Referendum literature over whichever half of the village may be assigned to them by the Referendum Committee. The Club will meet weekly, on Thursday evening.

On Sunday evening Oct. 5 at 7.30 there will be held a Union Service of the Methodist and Presbyterian Congregations at Cooper in St. Columbus Presbyterian Church. Rev. H. J. Fair will give an address in the interest of the Ontario Referendum Committee. Rev. A. C. Hie and Rev. A. Thompson will also assist in the service. A full attendance is hoped for and an interesting meeting is expected.

Dr. MacTavish Active Campaigner

Rev. Dr. MacTavish seems to be leading a strenuous life in the Referendum campaign. Last week he spoke in three Toronto Churches, The Clinton St. Methodist, The College St. Methodist and the Woodbine eight Anglican. On Friday evening he spoke in Ganouque to a large audience. On Sunday he preached in Lyn Caintown and Young Mills Presbyterian Churches. He reports that the campaign is progressing favorably, and that in some places the interest in the Referendum far surpasses the interest in the Political election. The Presbytery of Kingston has again nominated Rev. Dr. MacTavish for the Synod of Toronto and Kingston. Last year when nominated in the Synod he declined to stand. Owing to the Referendum Campaign the meeting of the Synod has been postponed for two weeks.

In Loving Memory

Of Pte. Russel Brady, who was killed in the battle of Cambrai, Sept. 27, 1918, aged 20 years, 3 months, 4 days.

Dear Russel, you have gone from us But still we feel you near. We think of you yet as day by day We see that vacant chair.

When the call for men from the Motherland Rang out from across the sea, Though only a boy you bravely went To fight for our liberty.

We believe you are buried in a soldier's grave Where the body now lies at rest. But you gave your life for a Righteous cause And God knoweth all things best.

With hearts that are almost broken We will gaze on your face no more Until we meet some happy day On that bright and blissful shore.

Presentation at Eldorado

On Monday evening Sept. 22nd a large crowd invaded the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Jones, and made the following address and presentation.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Jones and sons Elgin and Morris.

Dear friends—We your friends and neighbors have gathered here to-night to spend one more pleasant evening with you, and as a community bid you all "farewell" ere you depart for your new home in Peterboro.

Many pleasant memories are stirred as we think of the years you have dwelt among us. We expect to miss you.

We shall miss you as citizens, for in the various community interests, all along the years, you have played no small part and in the church of your choice you will be missed, for through various channels you were found serving.

Now as you leave us, and plan to follow new pursuits, and make new friendships, our best wishes for future health and prosperity go with you.

We trust that as citizens of a fair and growing city, you take a worthy part, and in your new church we hope you will be found willing and energetic workers.

As a token of our esteem, and that you may ever cherish fond memories of your sojourn among us, we ask you to accept these gifts. Mr. Jones this oak rocker, Mrs. Jones, this mahogany rocker, and silverware. Elgin and Morris, these military brushes.

With these gifts kindly accept our assurance that we will be delighted to welcome you in our midst; we wish you God speed, and our prayers are for you.

Signed in behalf of community.

Simeon Fox.

A. C. Hie.

Mr. Angus Nicholson, reeve of Madoc Township, ably acted as chairman for the occasion. Short addresses were delivered by Mrs. F. Comerford, Mrs. A. C. Hie, Councillor Miller Simeon Fox, Supt. of County roads and bridges, Rev. A. Thompson and A. C. Hie. Mr. Harry Jones also addressed the gathering in a very appropriate manner, expressing the appreciation of himself and family, re the many kindnesses of their friends and neighbors. After lunch was served, singing was enjoyed for a while, and a very pleasant time was brought to a close by the singing of "Auld Lang Syne" and "God be with you till we meet again."

The Canadian Graphite Co. are busy opening up a feldspar property in the vicinity of Hyda Station. A number of men are engaged and already several cars have been shipped to U. S. points where the quality of the ore is pronounced the best obtainable. With this in view, and providing the vein holds out, the company expect to develop and operate a medium size plant.—Bancroft Times.

The Why? of Another Victory Loan

WHEN, on the morning of November 11th, 1918, the guns were hushed and glad tidings flashed across the world, there followed with the Nation's Prayer of Thanksgiving, one yearning query, which found echo in the faster beating hearts of wives, mothers, fathers, brothers, sisters and sweethearts. That query was, "How soon will our boy be home?" And, from France and Flanders, from Italy and Egypt, from Palestine and from far-off Siberia, there came an answering echo, "How soon, how soon, may we go home?"

CANADA caught the spirit of these longings, and at once resolved to satisfy them. It was an appalling task. Shipping was tragically scarce. The composition of the Army of Occupation had not then been settled. And other parts of the Empire as well as Canada were looking for the speedy return of their men.

THE problem was this. The half-million men that Canada had overseas had taken more than four years to transport to the field of battle. To bring them home in a few months was a gigantic undertaking—one to tax all Canada's ingenuity and resources. Canada solved the problem, but it meant crowding into a few short months, an expense for demobilization which it was impossible to foresee.

THEN, too, besides the sentimental aspect of the necessity for bringing the men home quickly the economic side could not be overlooked. That was, to transform efficiently and speedily the nation's army of fighters into a national army of workers.

Need Divides Itself in Two Parts

Obligations to Soldiers

The answer to the question "Why does Canada need another Victory Loan?" divides itself into two parts. (a) To finish paying the expenses of demobilization, and the obligations we still owe to our soldiers. The obligations to soldiers include: That already incurred cost of bringing home troops from overseas. The payment of all soldiers still undemobilized. This includes more than 20,000 sick and wounded who are still in hospital, and who of course remain on the Army payroll till discharged. The upkeep of hospitals, and their medical and nursing staffs, until the need for them is ended. These three items alone will use up at least $200,000,000 of the Victory Loan 1919.

Gratuities

There is also the gratuity which has been authorized, and has been and is being paid to assist soldiers to tide over the period between discharge and their re-adjustment to civil life. For this purpose alone, $61,000,000 must be provided out of the Victory Loan 1919, in addition to the $59,000,000 already paid out of the proceeds of the Victory Loan 1918.

Land Settlement

Furthermore, soldiers who desire to become farmers may, under the Soldiers' Land Settlement Act, be loaned money by Canada with which to purchase land, stock and implements. The money so advanced will be paid back; meantime each loan is secured by a first mortgage. Up to August 15th, 29,495 soldiers had applied for land under the terms of this Act; and 22,281 applications had been investigated, and the qualifications of the applicant approved. For this purpose Canada this year requires $24,000,000.

Vocational Training

For this work which, with the Vocational Training and Soldiers' Service Departments, embraces the major activities of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, an appropriation of $57,000,000 is necessary.

Those who give thought to our outstanding obligations to soldiers, and to our need for national working capital, cannot fail to be impressed with the absolute necessity for the

These national expenditures are war expenses. They will be accepted readily by every citizen who gives thought to the task which Canada faced following the Armistice, and to the success with which she has met it.

National Working Capital

Canada needs national working capital, so that she may be able to sell on credit to Great Britain and our Allies the products of our farms, forests, fisheries, mines and factories.

You may ask "Why sell to them if they can't pay cash?" The answer is, "Their orders are absolutely essential to the continuance of our agricultural and industrial prosperity."

The magnitude of these orders and the amount of employment thus created, will depend upon the success of the Victory Loan 1919.

The "Why" of Credit Loans

Farmers and manufacturers (and that includes the workers on these orders) must be paid cash for their products. Therefore, Canada must borrow money from her citizens to give credit, temporarily, to Great Britain and our Allies. Actually, no money will pass out of Canada. If Canada does not give credit, other countries will; and they will get the trade, and have the employment that should be ours, to distribute amongst their workers. And remember, we absolutely need these orders to maintain employment. If we don't finance them business will feel the depression, employment will not be as plentiful, and conditions everywhere will be adversely affected.

For Transportation

Money must also be available to carry on the nation's shipbuilding programme, and other transportation development work.

For loans to Provincial Housing Commissions who are building moderate priced houses. These, then, are some of the things for which Canada needs national working capital. She is in the position of a great trading company, and her citizens who buy Victory Bonds are the shareholders.

AN AVIATOR FROM B.C.

COLLISHAW IS A LEADER IN R.A.F. RECORDS.

When He Commenced His Career, He Was Described as "One of Those Fool Would-be" Airmen. But He Has Covered Himself With Glory and His Breast With Decorations In the War.

AMONG airmen and those who study their records, a constant theme of discussion is, "Who is the outstanding Canadian aviator?"

Lieut. Claxton, of Toronto, brought down 24 machines in one month; Col. Bishop, V.C., holds the highest record; Major Barker, V.C., fought the greatest battle of them all and was looked upon as the finest tactician among the airmen on the Italian front; Major McKeever has the world's record as a two-seated pilot; Capt. MacLaren should have had the V.C. for his 57 machines; Capt. McAll, of Calgary, has a tremendous record, and if Major Carter hadn't shot his propeller off and had to descend in German territory, he would have been chasing the leaders very close.

But whatever name comes up before these impromptu tribunals, that of Major Collishaw is invariably mentioned among the very first. Collishaw is now 24 years of age, but I venture the opinion that in the matter of adventure, he could give almost any octogenarian a decent start and still come ahead.

He started his career by being born in Victoria, B.C., and, at the age of four, he had been to Alaska and back. He was educated in Victoria, but the proximity to the sea and a personality that has something of a hurricane about it, was urging him to seek new experiences. Accordingly when Stefansson went to the Antarctic one of his ship's officers was young Raymond Collishaw, for which the latter received his first decoration—a habit that grew on him in later years.

His next venture of consequence was to join that formidable service, the Canadian navy, sailing on the good ship Niobe.

When war broke out he was in the fishery patrol vessel Flipsa operating off the British Columbia coast, and he conceived the idea of joining the air service. He was one of the very first to try and fight in the air, and had the honor of being described by a (then) powerful person, as "one of those fool would-be aviators."

However, he was granted the privilege of paying the Curtiss Company for his tuition and with a dozen other air pioneers was taken to England and lost track of in the Naval Air Service. They were kept for months doing training more or less in connection with flying and France seemed an unattainable goal. At last they were sent out as an experiment, followed by the hearty doubts of everyone.

Of the eight greatest British pilots living to-day, seven are "would-be" Canadian aviators. When the time comes to apportion credit for the tremendous prestige Canada has attained through her airmen, let it be remembered that these first few pilots fought without encouragement or recognition, but they blazed the trail for the thousands who followed, until the Canadians dominated the whole British Air Force.

At different periods Collishaw piloted a D.S.O., then a D.S.C., followed by a D.P.C., and then a Bar to his D.S.O. These, added to his Antarctic ribbon, made an imposing array which grew with a Croix de Guerre (two palms) and the 1914-1915 ribbon.

He has an extraordinarily virile constitution, and shows very little strain from his three years and two months' flying service. True to his globe-trotting instincts he fought in Mesopotamia as well as in France. In the latter theatre of war he commanded No. 3 Naval Air Squadron, composed entirely of Canadians. In one year they shot down 203 hostile aircraft.

I ran into him the other day in London. He is heavily built, with a broad face and forehead, and one gets a distinct impression of power from the poise of the head. He told me many interesting things about the enthusiasm of Canadians at home for their own air service, and when Collishaw talks one listens. He is full of ideas and utters them with a rapidity that gives an impression of illimitable energy rather than nervousness.

"Are you going to fly the Atlantic?" I asked once when he paused. "If I can get a machine I will," he said, "and if not I want to go to Russia. Say, listen—" "I inclined my ear." "Australia had her own air force of six squadrons during the war and now she's going to maintain twelve. What's Canada going to do about it?"

The question was one of those that did not demand an answer, (like the queries put by clerks to their congregation during a sermon).

However, there is no harm in passing the question on. I know we have a Canadian air force in England composed of two squadrons, but what will happen when they get home?

A THRIVING INDUSTRY.

Pulp and Paper Being Wealth to Canada.

In the manufacture of pulp and paper Canada has supplied a splendid example of what may be done through a soundly conceived policy of directing legislation so as to develop natural resources. Here is an industry, the value of whose product last year was about $115,000,000, which was quickened into life through the mere enacting of legislation forbidding the export of pulp wood cut on crown lands. The effect of this, of course, was to compel the grinding of this wood into pulp, or its manufacture into paper here at home.

This legislation was put through about ten years ago and the results are to be seen in the fact that, whereas the exports of pulp and paper in 1911 were $5,494,731, for the fiscal year ending March 31 last they were $68,485,966. On the other hand, while in 1911 Canada exported to the United States $5,340,592 worth of pulpwood, by 1918 the value of these exports had been increased by only one-third, whereas the value of wood pulp and paper exports had been increased over twelve times.

Today about $200,000,000 are invested in the pulp and paper industry of this country. The annual payment in wages and salaries to employees is now put at $20,000,000. Those employees number 25,000 in mills and yards, and it is said that an equal number of other workmen are employed to get out the necessary wood.

Rapid as has been the growth of this industry during the last ten years, it still continues to extend for the very good reason that Canada has the pulpwood from which paper is made. The United States needs the paper, and its need is daily growing greater. In 1913 Canada exported to that country printing paper to the value of $5,893,174. For the fiscal year just closed the value of the product thus exported will be about $40,000,000. While the Canadian pulp and paper industry has gone ahead rapidly since 1910, the American industry has not expanded very much. It cannot expand because the American pulpwood areas are being rapidly depleted. The United States imports from Canada 25 per cent. of all the newspaper it uses. The Canadian forests also supply 15 per cent. of all the pulpwood used in the republic.

One of the best features of this industry is that it benefits so many of the provinces. In all but four, the prairie provinces and Prince Edward Island, are pulp or paper mills to be found. The latest available returns on the capital investment show that $84,609,534 are invested in Quebec, $72,806,870 in Ontario and $22,584,652 in British Columbia. In the last mentioned province the investment jumped from $8,344,415 in 1915 to $22,584,652 in 1917. There are now 101 mills producing pulp and paper, 45 in Quebec, 37 in Ontario, 7 in Nova Scotia, 6 in New Brunswick and 6 in British Columbia.

The Americans have a large investment in the Canadian industry, and one that is growing rapidly. American interests are believed to hold under lease pulpwood lands containing 32,000,000 cords of material, the value of which is placed at $250,000,000.

There is reason to think that very soon the pulp wood and paper industry will be represented in the prairie provinces, there being a strong movement under way to induce Winnipeg to put $1,000,000 into a pulp and paper mill. As Manitoba has the pulpwood, and also an abundance of cheap water power, it is quite probable that the pulp and paper industry may soon get a foothold there.

Of all Canada's important manufacturing industries, pulp and paper has probably received less direct assistance than any other. A little common sense legislation gave it its real opportunity. Enterprise and energy have done the rest.

The Hudson Bay Route.

F. E. Bowden, chief engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals, has had experience of Hudson Bay and believes in the feasibility of the route. He said recently it was possible that the whole of November might be added to the navigation season by establishing aids to navigation. Wireless stations and aircraft would greatly assist vessels in keeping clear of the ice-floes. Liners, however, were almost precluded from using the route having regard to ice, and from the point of view of the facilities at Port Nelson he would only recommend that vessels of 7,500 tons carrying capacity should be placed on the route. Larger vessels could not be accommodated in the harbor.

He was unable to say definitely whether the rate on grain across the Atlantic would be lowered by the Hudson Bay route, as their estimates were too problematical, and also it would be utterly impossible to get 100 or 150 vessels on the route until the Government had thoroughly demonstrated its feasibility.

Private owners would not put on their vessels before. He pointed out the value of the short haul to Hudson Bay by rail from the Western provinces so far as animals were concerned. The great loss of weight by rail would be avoided, and it had been found that the loss on vessels in the weight of animals was negligible.

The Arctic Night. Viewed solely as a matter of optics, the Arctic night is as dark as any night. Explorers in high latitudes say, however, that there are many alleviations of the obscurity. The stars flash keenly, the moon comes along in a frequent succession of phases, the snow surface relieves the gloom under conditions of the utmost absence of light, and the aurora borealis is the finest kind of illuminant. Explorers all agree that their men pass the winter night without much difficulty if only there are means of amusement.

"I know a perfectly safe place for your diamond rings, mother." "Where?" "On Bud's fingers." "Silly, he'd be sure to lose them." "No, he wouldn't. You'd never be in any danger of Bud taking them off to wash his hands."

The Scholarly Cut. "You did not speak to him?" "No," replied the scholarly girl. "When I passed him I gave him the geological survey." "The geological survey?" "Yes. What is commonly known as the stony stare."—Lehigh Burr.

Too Anxious. "Jaggs told me his wife had met with an accident, and he was so afraid she would attempt to be active with her injury too soon." "What was her injury?" "She fractured her jaw."

How He Did It. "Did you hear that our friend Jones got caught in a copper corner?" "Was he investing heavily?" "No, took a little too much hilarity aboard, and ran into a bunch of policemen just around the corner."

Affinity. "A friend of mine has a small son who asked him the other day why they took up church collections in pews." "What did he tell him?" "That it was the natural thing to take a pan to get the dough."

HE EXPLAINS. "Doctor, why don't you cure more people with your advice?" "Because a lot of them don't follow it, my friend."

Finishing Advice. The nurse to the baby, crooning, so softly sings, "By-low, by-low." While the baby's business pa doth cry, "That's right, buy low, but, son, sell high."

Her Side of It. She—Perseverance always wins in the end. He—Then you'll marry me! She—No, I was just wondering how much longer I'd have to say "No."—Dartmouth Jack o' Lantern.

WHAT DID SHE BUMP?

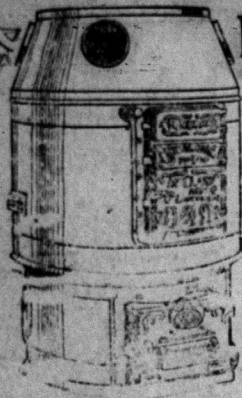

In these days of good education children learn things their fathers and mothers know very little about. Nora, aged nine, met her father the other day, with her little blue eyes full of tears.

"Oh, daddy," she wailed, "I've just fallen and bumped my patella." "Dear, dear! Poor little girl!" said father sympathetically, as with the best intentions in the world he bent to examine her elbow.

Nora drew herself angrily away. "Humph!" she snorted, with a superior air. "I said my patella—that's not my elbow. My elbow's my great sesamoid!"

Make Them Over

With the present high prices of materials, we will surely come back to the practice of making over clothes just before the war most of us got out of this habit, and though as children we were made-over frocks and coats at times we have recently come to the conclusion that the time involved was worth more than was saved by that bill of effort. However as things are now the time involved is well worth the result reaped by that conservation. Often in a discarded blue serge frock of your own you will be able to find material enough which if washed, pressed and used inside out would be enough for the little girl's frock.

Who Am I?

I am more powerful than the combined armies of the world.
I am more deadly than bullets, and I have wrecked more homes than the mightiest of siege guns.
I ate in the United States alone $300,000,000 each year.
I spare no one, and find my victims among the rich and the poor alike; the young and the old; the strong and the weak; widows and orphans know me.
I massacre thousands upon thousands of wage earners in a year.
I lurk in unseen places, and do most of my work silently. You are warned against me, but you heed not.
I am relentless. I am everywhere; in the home, on the street, in the factory at railroad crossings, and on the sea.
I bring sickness, degradation, and death, and yet few seek to avoid me. I destroy, crush, and maim; I give nothing, but take all.
I am your worst enemy.
I am Carelessness!

"SHE withstood everything in the field and above all was, and still is, the last and only car to survive until the cessation of hostilities."—Extract from letter received by Ford Motor Company from a British Soldier, in Africa.

Over shell-torn roads, through water soaked fields, second only to the tanks in its power to climb debris and crater holes, the Ford car made a world famous record in the fighting area of the great war. In press despatches, in field reports, in letters, in rhyme and song the praises of the Ford were sounded.

In France - 700 cars out of 1,000 were Fords
In Italy - 850 cars out of 1,000 were Fords

ARE ALMOST HUMAN

Monkeys in Their Native Wilds Show Keen Wit.

Clever Manner in Which One of Them Got the Best of Crocodile Is Proof of Their Possession of Intelligence.

The nature and character of the monkey are not changed by any training that he may receive. All the little tricks that may be taught him in captivity will add little to what he is accustomed to practice in his wild state. The chief difference to him is that he has a different set of victims to torment. Those who have had a chance to watch the rascals in their native wilds and native wildness find them up to the same mischievous pranks they play in captivity.

Every little while our expedition passed under trees occupied by troops of monkeys, some of them of the large kind that had given the explorers much trouble on a former occasion. One large tree in which they had established their quarters stretched its branches over a stream twenty yards or more.

While the leader of the expedition was watching the antics of the monkeys, two crocodiles showed their heads just underneath and remained stationary with their ugly snouts sticking up in the air. In various countries this is a common dodge of the crocodiles to entice the monkeys within their reach, and it was expected by the witnesses of this incident that one or more of the noisy animals would fall victims to the goggle-eyed monsters below, and it was with considerable curiosity that the result was awaited.

As soon as the black-looking heads popped up the monkeys became silent. Presently one big fellow, evidently of authority in the monkey republic, came down to reconnoiter. He returned, and in a few minutes came back with a long, thin stick in his hand and accompanied by about a hundred of his friends. They began to chatter and to pelt their foes, but the crocodiles took no notice. The onlookers thought they seemed to give a wink of satisfaction at seeing their silly victims coming within their reach.

Nearer and nearer they came, until some of them were barely six feet above the crocodiles, and the men watching were expecting every instant to see one of them dragged under the water. All of a sudden the monkey with the stick leaned over and drove it into the eye of the crocodile nearest him. The wounded reptile sank like lead and was quickly followed by its comrade.

There was no mistaking the howl of delight that greeted this stratagem and its success. It was perfectly human in its tone and was taken up in vengeful glee by all the monkeys in the neighborhood. The gravity of demeanor with which the old fellow committed this assault was laughable in the extreme. He went to work with all the caution of an old lawyer, and when he had inflicted the poke he hauled himself up with an alacrity that showed he could form a very good estimation of the danger that he ran.

Appearances Were Against Her.

An amusing story was told to me the other day concerning Lady Sybil Grant, daughter of the earl of Rosebery.

It appears that her ladyship, who is an enthusiastic war worker, recently assisted in waiting upon some wounded soldiers at a concert and tea got up for their entertainment.

At the close of the meal one of the guests, not in the least realizing who she was, shyly offered her a tip, which was politely declined.

"I really don't need it, you know," said Lady Sybil smilingly. "I've got plenty of money."

"Is that so?" exclaimed the soldier. In tones of evident surprise, allowing his gaze to rest on the plain linen overalls she had donned for the occasion.

"You've got plenty of money, have you?"

Lady Sybil nodded assent.

"Well, miss," was the somewhat disconcerting reply, "you'll excuse me saying so, won't you? But—you don't look it."—Pearson's Weekly.

United States Buys Feathers.

Although the export of feathers (duck, fowl, etc.) from China as a whole has decreased somewhat during the past few years, owing to the elimination of the German buyers, says a Shanghai newspaper, the export of feathers from China to America has shown a great increase since the outbreak of the war. America having stepped in to take almost the identical quantity that Germany had previously taken.

Tall and Short Britishers.

The tallest people in the British Isles are to be found in the district of Galloway, in South Scotland, where records of the stature gives an average height of five feet ten inches. The shortest stature is found in Wales and southwest England.

The Queer Sex.

"Wife, I'm afraid I can't afford new clothes for this spring."

"Well, then, Dick, we must move. I don't mind wearing my old clothes in a new neighborhood, but I won't stay here and wear them."—Boston Evening Transcript.

Ancient Scottish Custom.

In the Scottish highlands in olden times a burning wooden cross was carried blazing to and fro among the clansmen to rouse them to battle.

Mighty Imaginative.

"The notes of the deep-voiced frogs out yonder suggest Wagnerian music to me."

"They aren't all deep-voiced. Some of it is pollywoggeran music."

In Other Days.

First Mermaid—What is all the racket about?

Second Ditto—Oh, only those sirens on the rocks blowing about the ship-load of men coming in.

She Knew.

"I thought you said you knew something about cooking," said the mistress.

"I did say so," admitted Mary Jane.

"Well, how do you make hash?"

"You don't make it. It simply accumulates."

In the Court.

Prosecutor—Here is a man who made it a specialty to victimize country ministers.

Judge—I see; a regular shepherd's crook.

How to say "No!"

Mark Your Ballot with an X after Each Question under the word "No"

1	Are you in favour of the repeal of the Ontario Temperance Act?	YES	NO
			X
2	Are you in favour of the sale of light beer containing not more than two and fifty-one one-hundredths per cent. alcohol weight measure through Government agencies and amendments to The Ontario Temperance Act to permit such sale?	YES	NO
3	Are you in favour of the sale of light beer containing not more than two and fifty-one one-hundredths per cent. alcohol weight measure in standard hotels in local municipalities that by a majority vote favour such sale and amendments to The Ontario Temperance Act to permit such sale?	YES	NO
4	Are you in favour of the sale of spirituous and malt liquors through Government agencies and amendments to The Ontario Temperance Act to permit such sale?	YES	NO

Above is an exact reproduction of the Referendum ballot, showing the correct way to Vote in order to sustain the Ontario Temperance Act as it stands.

Everybody should study the four questions and realize exactly what they mean. Do not be misled by the insidious demand for "light" beer.

The beer of the ballot is 118% stronger than the Ontario Temperance Act now allows, and over five times as strong as the limit allowed for beer defined as non-intoxicating in Great Britain and the United States.

Answer Each Question

1. Unless you vote on every question your ballot is spoiled.
2. You must mark your answer to each question with an "X" only. Anything else would spoil your ballot.
3. Unless a majority vote "No" on question 1 the bars will be restored and the sale of all kinds of intoxicants permitted.
4. Unless a majority vote "No" on questions 2, 3 and 4 the Ontario Temperance Act will become almost worthless.
5. The only SAFE course is to mark your ballot as shown above.

"No!"—Four Times—"No!"

No repeal; No government beer shops; No beer saloons; No government whiskey shops.—Four X's, each under the word "No."

Comradeship

Admiral Sir David Beatty

Samuel Gompers

ADMIRAL Sir David Beatty, when speaking at Leicester a few days ago, said:—

"We have been through four and a half years of a great struggle. We have all learned something—the true value of comradeship. Comradeship has enabled us to win the war."

Realizing the significance and truth of this statement the Citizens' Liberty League appeals to the people of this Province to develop the spirit of comradeship, mutual forbearance, toleration and sympathy. Let us be fair-minded, less rigid, more reasonable, and more willing to give and take.

The workmen of Ontario appeal for better beer—non-intoxicating beer—beer containing 2.51% alcohol by weight—THE BEER OF THE BALLOT.

Samuel Gompers, the world's greatest labor leader, stated the workman's position clearly when he said:

"The normal man, the men of Labor who work eight hours a day and no more, the workmen who earn decent pay, the workmen who have comparatively comfortable homes, they do not want the artificial spirit. The man of normal spirit finds comfort in pleasant surroundings; he does not need, and, as a rule, does not partake of intoxicating drinks; he shuns the effects of intoxicants. What we now ask is that the men of Labor, the masses of our people, shall have the opportunity to drink a glass of beer of not more than 2 1/2% by weight of alcohol in that beer, and I am told you cannot drink enough of that character of beer to get drunk even if you tried."

Scientific tests, practical experiments and thorough research prove that beer of even greater strength than 2.51% of alcohol by weight, is absolutely non-intoxicating. (The results of these tests have been filed with the United States Circuit Court of Appeals).

As no harmful results can possibly come from drinking beer of this quality—is there any fair or logical reason why the working men should not have the more palatable beer for which they are asking—THE BEER OF THE BALLOT?

Support the working men and the Citizens' Liberty League in the endeavor to obtain a fair, just and reasonable compromise on the present too drastic prohibitory legislation.

Vote "YES" to all Four Questions

Mark your ballot with an X. Any other markings will spoil it. Remember also—every voter must vote on every question or his ballot will be spoiled.

Our Readers will note as previously mentioned in our columns, that the Leader contains various advertisements bearing upon the coming Referendum vote, and would like it understood that the columns of this paper are open to all parties and controlled by none. We believe that an issue before the people should have all sides and angles clearly put before them. This no doubt does not meet the approval of certain individuals. For this, we have no apology to offer and would like to say that the great principles on which the British Empire stands, namely: "Equal Rights to all and Special Privileges to None," is the motto of our service to the people.—Sterling Leader.

my behind, winced whenever he heard Adele's fresh and care free laughter. It was an unwelcome sound, and more than once he caught himself commenting that it was as unwelcome.

Meanwhile Kirby's good angel—if a professional gambler may be permitted to own one—was in another direction looking after his interests with unabated zeal, postponing his exposure and consequently prolonging his intimacy with the Randalls.

It must be remembered that only Tom Randall and his cousin Aaron had met Colonel Moreau, and thus Kirby's exposure as an impostor could only come from these two. The hot headed, vengeful boy was still busy scouring New Orleans for his supposed enemy, and thus his presence at the plantation would be indefinitely postponed until he had either succeeded in tracking Kirby or had abandoned all hope of so doing.

On the other hand, however, Aaron, heeding his cousin's wishes, had accompanied Croup to the plantation, where he confidently expected to find Judge Pleydell, who had preceded him thither; but, learning on his arrival that the latter had ridden over to his plantation, Aaron immediately followed. It so happened, however, that Judge Pleydell, completing his errand, had returned to the Randalls and, taking a short cut through a lane which connected the two estates, unwittingly passed Aaron, who had followed the highroad. Thus when Kirby and the ladies eventually arrived the old judge, supported by a jubilant crowd of negro field hands and domestic servants, was the only one to welcome them.

Standing on the steps of the wide veranda while she swung her bonnet by its strings, Adele, smiling and flushing by turns, boldly introduced the pseudo Moreau to her family's old friend.

"Colonel Moreau, this is indeed a happy and propitious occasion," warmly responded the judge, while he shook Kirby by the hand. "And never in my life have I seen so delightful and welcome an alteration as is apparent in the health and spirits of the young mistress of this plantation. What is the magic secret to account for so great a change since last evening?"

"Ah, it was the river!" demurely suggested his daughter, glancing from Adele to Kirby.

"The river!" echoed Mrs. Davezac. "Maid—no. 'Tis was that charming Colonel Moreau. I think he brings the sunshine we have been waiting for so long."

While the others, with the exception of the moody and despondent M. Veaudry, entered the house, Adele, offering the excuse that she wished to see her roses again, sought flower basket and scissors and, accompanied by the indomitable Kirby, repaired to the garden, Anatole watching them with broody, longing eyes.

Presently he became aware that another was as interested as himself, and, turning, he found Croup at his elbow. The old serving man continued for some time to silently scan Kirby's retreating figure.

"Who you say were that gentleman's name, Marse Anatole?" he at length inquired.

"Colonel Moreau," abstractedly replied M. Veaudry.

"Yes, seh. Yes, seh," acknowledged Croup. "Dat's de name what he done give. Yes, seh. But he was far from satisfied and, still shaking his head and mumbling to himself, returned indoors. Certainly neither Kirby nor Croup—quondam servant and youthful master—had the remotest idea that, after a separation of so many years, they had finally met.

He turned as Kirby emerged from the garden, Adele having halted some distance down the path.

"I have just learn, sir," began Anatole, with a bow, "of the great privilege you have had today. We know by the pleasure to see you alive that there is one great secret which is not."

"Who's that?" asked Kirby, lighting a cheroot.

"I offer you congratulation," pursued the young creole formally and rather stiffly, "that you have earn the gratitude of all good people."

"What for?"

"Because you have the honor to kill that Cameo Kirby."

The other with perfect composure gravely eyed his cheroot, while he successfully concealed all evidence of any other feeling.

"Well," he said courteously, "I always hoped that nobody but myself would kill that fellow. I suppose many have wished to, but they didn't have my luck."

"But most I congratulate you, M. le Colonel," finished Anatole, his voice tremulous with emotion, "is that you have earn so much gratitude—here, making an eloquent gesture toward the house."

This time Kirby could not conceal his astonishment. "And why should that have earned me so much gratitude—here?" he asked bluntly, imitating the other's gesture.

Before M. Veaudry could reply Adele had joined the group.

"Anatole has presented you to the colonel," she inquired, turning to her cousin. Then, heedless of his evident amazement, she gayly continued, turning to Kirby: "This is our good cousin Aaron. Aaron, you will be glad to know that this gentleman is Colonel Moreau. I have the honor to present you."

"Colonel Moreau!" gasped Aaron, aghast. "Why—why—I met Colonel Moreau—this morning!"

Adele started and paled as, too late, she fully realized the truth. But Kirby remained the same courteous, amiable and care free gentleman of the carriage, while he eyed Aaron steadily.

"Does it seem to you that I have changed since we last met?" he blandly inquired. "Perhaps you would hardly know me for the same man?"

In fact, if Miss Adele hadn't told you that I am Colonel Moreau you would not have believed it? But you take her word for it, don't you?"

After a long, tense silence the bewildered Aaron gravely inclined his head, saying, "Yes, I take her word."

"Ah, I thought so," gently commented Kirby, and, bowing, he joined Miss Pleydell and the General in the garden.

"Cousin Aaron," said Adele earnestly, "I did introduce that gentleman as Colonel Moreau. I know just what I am doing. I ask you to trust me until Tom comes, because I ought to tell him first. Will you do it?" And, again, Aaron, after a momentary struggle, assented.

When the girl had rejoined Kirby in the garden, M. Veaudry, who had been an interested spectator of the little tableau, exchanged with his companion a significant glance of grave suspicion.

"He must have changed quickly, this colonel, since you saw him this morning," he commented dryly. "I think—But who is this gentleman?" turning to confront Larkin Bunce, who, moping his inflamed face with a dusty sleeve, had thrown himself from his weary horse and boldly entered the gate. In fact, he had ridden at a breakneck pace all the way from New Orleans.

"Your servant, sir," he greeted, bowing to Aaron. "I'm lookin' for the gentleman who come here in the carriage with the ladies."

"Ah," exclaimed Mr. Randall, closely scanning the other, "you're the gentleman who came to see Colonel Moreau this morning. Do you wish to see him now?"

Bunce started violently, turning as pale as his overcast condition permitted. "Good God, no!" he exclaimed.

"But it was Colonel Moreau who accompanied the ladies," explained Aaron. "And, sir, here he is now."

The old gambler turned with a subdued exclamation of alarm, as if fully expecting to see the ghost of the late lamented Moreau. But instead his startled eyes met those of his partner who, humming softly to himself, was calmly approaching, a white camellia in his hand.

"Come, cheer up, Mr. Bunce. I hope

I see you well," greeted Kirby. Then, politely turning to Aaron, he added: "Mr. Bunce is confused. His long ride in the heat has been too much for him. Mr. Bunce is my secretary. He looks robust, but is, in fact, very delicate. Might I so far trespass upon your hospitality as to beg a cooling draft for him?"

Aaron bowed gravely and, accompanied by M. Veaudry, retired indoors. They had hardly left when Bunce's long repressed emotion overcame him.

"A cooling draft," he echoed, with violent scorn. "I want a drink, and let it be strong, friend. I always knowed you was a fool, Gene Kirby, but I never knowed it was as bad as this. All the names in the world to pick from, and you chose the name of Jack Moreau! Why, dog my cats!"

"IT WAS THE ANGEL OF CHANCE WHO GAVE ME THE NAME."

"Chance, Larkin, chance," returned Kirby, quite unmoved. "It was the angel of chance who gave me the name."

"Angels? Angels?" caught up the other, his voice faint with the violence of his sarcasm. "Darned if I ain't lost my heart!"

"I'll be dogged if I ain't lost my heart. Skin me if it don't seem like I'm settin' out in a garden and hearin' Gene Kirby talkin' about angels. It sounded jest like his voice. 'Angels,' he says. Him—Cameo Kirby! Poor old Gene Kirby! Why, you must be brain'd chucklehead," he finished angrily. "Don't you know that Tom Randall's been raisin' b— all over New Orleans, tryin' to run you down?"

"Well, what of it?"

Bunce, making a gesture eloquent of despair, feebly sought the garden seat and mopped his inflamed face anew. "He asks me what of that," he wailed to the surrounding scenery. "You pore, wanderin' lunatic! You know blame well that of all places on earth this is the last you should have tumbled into. Now," with sudden energy and decision, "git ready to git out—quick! My hoss is dead beat, but git your angel to loan you one and slope for the river. I'll catch you up at Natchez."

But Kirby calmly refused the proffered riding whip.

"What's all the reason I shouldn't stay here?" he demanded. "Why should I expect danger from these people—Mme. Davezac, a Miss Pleydell and her father, a creole named Veaudry and a Miss Adele?"

"Miss Adele who?" bellowed Bunce. "I don't know. That's all I've heard them call her."

Here the fates again intervened in the name of procrastination, for before Bunce could inform his partner that he was the guest of the family which, thanks to the efforts of Colonel Moreau, was his sworn enemy the ladies entered, and to the fleshy gambler's infinite disgust, anger and misery he was again promptly introduced by Kirby as "my secretary." Moreover, despite his utmost efforts he eventually found himself pledged to remain the night.

"But I durn't do it, ma'am," he had expostulated to the smiling and indomitable Mme. Davezac. "Me and Kirby—I mean me and Colonel Moreau got to git right out of here. There's some mighty pressin' business waitin' for us—specially for him, ma'am."

"Ah, but you will make pos'pone that business," she returned. "I've already had your horse taken to the stable. Colonel Moreau, he says he will do us the honor to dine with us and remain the night, and that Adele—"

You are his friend and secretar— So I shall see you at dinner, M. Bunce. Croup, the gentleman's room."

And Larkin, making an uncount bow, swallowed his curses and followed the old servant. Passing Kirby, he breathed scornfully. "If I was some people I'd find out more about other people."

Alone with Adele, Kirby leaned against the old sundial and attentively watched her deftly arrange in the basket her freshly gathered bunch of flowers.

"Your friend evidently thinks you are not safe here," she said at length. "But you won't go? I—I know you are safe here."

"I doubt it," he calmly interrupted. "Why?" sharply, looking up with startled, wounded eyes.

"Because you are giving me a longer time to remember your kindness than I expected, and I'm afraid I'm finding that that isn't the safest thing in the world for me."

"Great danger in that, sir?" she gayly asked.

He joined in her laugh, but his eyes were half serious. "People who play with fire—"

"Ah, but I don't believe you are a toward, sir. Of what was your friend afraid?"

"Well, mainly he seemed disturbed because I didn't know your name," smiled Kirby.

"But you do."

"Pardon, I don't. This is the first time I've been alone with you since we started. I've only heard you called 'Miss Adele.' I don't even know whose plantation this is."

"Neither do—"

"I want to show you something," And, as if yielding to a sudden impulse, she unfurled from her neck a jeweled miniature and handed it to her companion.

Kirby instantly recognized it as a portrait of the late John Randall, and in a breath the full significance of Bunce's observations came to him. Amazed, he looked from the miniature to Adele, then to the house and back again to her. Observing his emotion, she whispered, "You knew my father?"

STEPHEN PICHON.
 French Foreign Minister is Typical Diplomat.
 Anyone who has seen a photograph of Stephen Pichon, French Foreign Minister, must have noted him up as a typical diplomat of the old school, a fit master of the "Grand d'Orsay" sketch of his life and character. The Minister, a tall, thin, dark man, with a high forehead, a life serious, even when a child, grave little boy, clad in long trousers and lion jacket, he trotted unflinchingly to school through the quiet old streets of Ann-le-Duc. He was, it is said, a very good little boy; his elders praised him highly; he rarely made noise, and did not care to play with his livelier schoolmates. In fact, his father, who was a collector in the tiny Cote d'Or city, was very proud of his quiet little son.

It would hardly appear at first sight that such a retiring—almost timid—child would be well equipped for the battle of life. Yet Stephen Pichon is, in all of the acceptations of the phrase, a "self-made man." When his father had passed away, his family had great difficulties to face, but convinced that where there is a will there is a way, young Pichon set to work to secure the material independence which would relieve his mother of all anxiety on his account. One day, at a lunch given by mutual friends at the famous restaurant Foyot, at the angle of the Rue de Tournon and the Rue de Valenciennes, in the shade of the Senate to which many years later both were to belong, Stephen Pichon made the acquaintance of Clemenceau. The latter, attracted by the qualities he was quick to detect in the young man, engaged him as reporter in the Revolution Française, of which he was then co-director with Sigismund Lacroix. A couple of years later, having founded La Justice, Clemenceau entrusted "little Pichon" with the task of reporting the meetings of the Senate. The young man continued to write for that paper until 1880, and it was while on it that he made the acquaintance of Mille-rand, Aurelien School, and Jules Roche.

Mr. Pichon was an excellent journalist. He revealed both a diversity of ideas and a penetrating judgment, which were the precursors of that sagacity which had always characterized his political career. He treated with equal care and talent the most varied subjects, ranging from sociology to literature, from history to political economy, and he has also written a particularly fine essay on Charles Pasty, the forerunner of socialism, one of the great French journalists. He revealed both a diversity of ideas and a penetrating judgment, which were the precursors of that sagacity which had always characterized his political career. It Helps Others

Will Help Me
 With This Belief Many Thousands Have Learned the Exceptional Value of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

You hear people talking about Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. You read about it in the newspapers. You wonder if it would benefit you. And while you are hesitating others are using it to great advantage. This treatment for the restoration of the blood and nerves is so different to most medicines that you may not realize why you can be so certain of benefit from its use. In order to maintain the vigor of the nervous system an abundance of pure, rich blood is necessary. When the nervous system becomes exhausted and you are easily tired and suffer from headaches, sleeplessness, irritability or indigestion, it is because the blood is failing to supply proper nutrition to the nervous system. By forming new, rich blood, Dr. Chase's Nerve Food naturally and certainly restores the vigor of the nerves. Since it works hand-in-hand with nature, it cannot fail to be of benefit, and there is no reason why it will not help you just as it has the writer of this letter. Mrs. Stephen G. Thwaites, Box 205, Jordan, Ont., writes: "For about a year I was troubled with nervousness, and took doctors' medicine, but it did not seem to relieve me. I could not sleep nor content myself to do anything. I had severe headaches, was tired all the time, and afraid to stay alone. I also tried several nerve medicines until almost discouraged. At last I discovered Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and found relief in this. I had only taken one box when I began to feel better. I continued using this treatment until my nerves were restored to perfect health. I think the Nerve Food splendid for nervous troubles of any kind, and cannot recommend it too highly." (Rev. S. F. Coffman, Vineland, Ont., states: "This is to certify that I know Mrs. Thwaites, and her statements are correct.") Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, a full treatment of 6 boxes for $2.75, at all dealers, or Edman-nam, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto. Do not be talked into accepting a substitute. Imitations only disappoint.

Nevertheless, journalism did not satisfy him as a "life work." Politics soon exerted a great and irresistible attraction for him, and in 1883 he succeeded in being elected as Municipal Councillor of Paris, the almost inevitable stepping-stone toward the more enviable position of deputy, which he attained in 1885. At this period he definitely abandoned journalism, never again to take it up, and this mental attitude is extremely characteristic of Mr. Pichon, who in the course of his life never resumed any of his former occupations—thus resolutely turning his back upon the past and looking only toward the future. Failing to be re-elected in 1893, he immediately concentrated his attention on a diplomatic career, with such success that he was soon appointed Minister Plenipotentiary to Port-au-Prince. It should be remarked that Mr. Pichon, unlike any of his colleagues, ministers for foreign affairs—has actually visited widely different countries, with the result that he has acquired a very real and useful knowledge of racial characteristics. In 1895 he was appointed Minister to Brazil, but unfortunately he remained there only two years, during which time he fully realized the great influence which France could and should acquire in South America, then a world in the making. The year 1897 saw Mr. Pichon in Pekin. Here again he was confronted with the delicate problem of dealing with an altogether unknown psychology which he was able to study under particularly harrowing circumstances, being there during the Boxer revolt of 1900. His "Diary of the Siege of Pekin," written with all the consciousness of a diplomatic document, contains some particularly interesting descriptions of the various episodes in this drama. Mr. Pichon and his wife displayed much bravery and self-control. In 1901, Mr. Pichon went to Tunis, as resident-general, and he fulfilled the big and delicate duties intrusted him greatly to the satisfaction of the Bey, while developing French interests throughout the whole protectorate in a most important manner. Although he seemed definitely to have abandoned politics, Mr. Stephen Pichon had never ceased to remain in touch with Mr. Clemenceau, and when the latter became Prime Minister in 1906, he did not forget to recall his old friend from Tunis to assume the portfolio of Foreign Affairs. Thirteen years have elapsed since then. Both Clemenceau and Stephen Pichon again occupy their respective positions of yore, at a moment when the reconstruction of France and the remaking of the world are at stake.

Stranger Than Fiction. Among the advertisements on the first page of an Australian rural newspaper appears one tradesman's praise of the "beautiful fresh bread" he distributes, and another tradesman's acclaim of the "beautiful Cavegnish bananas" he has for sale. After reading further and finding with relief that at least one individual deals in "beautiful art" in this led to wonder just when Lewis Carroll was exercising his imagination, and when he was merely setting down faithfully what he had heard when he penned such poems of praise as that Alice in Wonderland lyric which concludes: Soup of the evening, Beautiful soup.

EVERY farmer should care for his farm buildings in such a way as to maintain them in good serviceable condition and so conserve his resources generally. On most farms there are many details in themselves of minor importance, but in the aggregate of tremendous influence. Carelessness of the exterior of buildings is an indication, generally, of the conditions existing in their interior. Slovenly surroundings and general run-down conditions are the hall-marks of ineptitude and mismanagement. The farmer may not be able to change the location of his farm, but to a great extent he can control its appearance and general conditions by seeing that the roofs are in good repair and weather tight, the fences in place, gates in order and painted, on hinges, not sagging or dragging on the ground, the latches and hinges of all doors and gates greased and operating freely; no broken lights in the window sashes of the various buildings; the stable fixtures in order, the stanchions and partitions in place, and the mangers and floor in good repair, giving to the whole place the impression that it receives prudent care and regular attention. Investigations have disclosed the fact that concrete is an ideal material for repairing and making in the hands of a resourceful person on the farm. Publications issued by cement manufacturers as to tools and materials used, aggregates, proportioning the mixture, how to mix, how to plan forms, reinforcement, etc., may be obtained for the asking. Doors—The ordinary stable door construction of two thicknesses of matched lumber is not satisfactory, because the effect of the warm moist air of the stable on the inside ply of lumber causes it to swell, while the outer lumber, being less affected, causes the door to spring out top and bottom. A paneled door is less affected because the expansion and contraction resulting from atmospheric conditions is taken up by the panels. To hang a door hold it up against the jambs and mark round with a pencil. Then cut down to these lines. Make it 1/4 narrower and 1/4 shorter. The hinges should be placed about six inches from the top and the lower one ten inches from the bottom. The thickness of the casing should be taken from the total width of the hinge, the balance, divided by two, gives the distance the hinge is to set back from the face side of the door. In all cases the hinge should be wide enough to reach across two-thirds of the thickness of the door. Heavy doors should have three hinges. The mortise for the hinge of the door should bevel slightly toward the front, so that the hinge will not strike the jamb. Setting locks for the door—Rim locks are those that are simply screwed on to the face of the door. Mortise locks are those set into a mortise in the door itself. The rim lock is held in position and marked for keyhole, knob-bar hole, and screw holes. The first two are cut and the last are bored and the lock is inserted into place. The escutcheon and knob plates are put on, and the keeper is then put on to the jamb. The mortise lock is set into the mortise cut in the door just wide and deep enough to admit it, the face plate of the lock being set flush with the face of the edge of the door. Mark for the knob-bar and keyhole holes. Set the lock and fasten in two knob plates and escutcheon set, and knobs adjusted. The keeper is then mortised into its proper place, flush with the edge of the jamb. Roof.—See that the roof is tight. Remember that there are shingles and shingles. The old standard size is 18 inches long—five butts together to equal 2 1/4 inches—are superior in several ways to the present method of cutting them to 16 inches long, six butts of two inches. Much depends on the way the shingle is manufactured. A roughly cut shingle will not give good service because of its tendency to draw the water up under the weather line by capillary attraction, and the "fuzz" harbors dust, making good hold for moss to start growing. The edging should be smooth and carefully done so that the butts are slightly narrower than the points so as to allow any debris to pass through the joints and not accumulate and start a rot. Cattle Ties and Mangers.—The comfort of the cattle is of great importance as it affects the milk production and their feeding quality. Whatever type of manger is used simplicity of construction, convenience of feeding and cleaning should be considered. The swivel of the chain cow-tie should be examined to see if it works freely. In any case apply a little grease to it. Any weak or broken links may be neatly and effectively secured by using a slit-link or a wire link made out of two or three turns of fence wire through the links, allowing the ends long enough to be crossed and wound round the strands in opposite direction after the manner of the lineman's splice. The stanchions, links and swivels should be attended to in similar way. —Prof. John Evans, O. A. College, Guelph.

THE DAZEY METAL CHURN
 8 SIZES OF GLASS AND METAL
 The DAZEY cannot be compared with any other churn on the market because there is such an immense difference. The DAZEY is not an imitation; it is an entirely new design in churn making; it is better. Just think of the difference between this churn and the old style dash, or wooden churns that take at least one-half hour to churn, whereas the DAZEY churns your butter in 15 minutes. Surely your time is worth 35c per hour. At this rate the DAZEY would save you $15.00 every year or more than 100 times its cost. THE DAZEY IS AS EASILY CLEANED AS A TIN PAIL. Because the receptacle which holds the cream is removable from the grinding, and as there are no rough or uneven surfaces or bearings inside.
DAZEY METAL CHURNS
 ARE MORE SANITARY THAN WOODEN CHURNS
 The DAZEY Makes More Butter Than Any Other Churn Out of the Same Amount of Cream. This can be easily proved by putting one-half of your cream in each churn and then weighing the butter; the scales will show the facts. The DAZEY receptacle cannot absorb a particle of butter fat or moisture and therefore will never become rancid. There is nothing about the DAZEY to wear out. There are no complicated parts; very simple; runs light and will last for years.

$5,000.00 Challenge

THE CANADA PERMANENT TRUST COMPANY
TORONTO, ONT.
No. 402
Toronto, September 16th, 1919.
Receipt is hereby acknowledged from the ONTARIO BREWERS' ASSOCIATION of the sum of Five Thousand Dollars deposited with us under a Challenge agreement made this day to the ONTARIO REFERENDUM COMMITTEE to prove that Beer containing 2.51% alcohol by weight is intoxicating.
A. E. Hession
Manager, Ontario Branch.

TO THE REFERENDUM COMMITTEE

The Ontario Brewers' Association can no longer disregard the attempts of the Ontario Referendum Committee to mislead the people of this Province in the forthcoming Referendum:

In its campaign literature the Referendum Committee has corrupted the statutory ballot as set out below, and its advertising positively asserts that the light beer to be voted on is intoxicating.

The Referendum Committee is either misinformed or is deliberately misleading the people for a purpose.

The purpose is to make the voters believe that they are voting for or against intoxicating beer.

Examine carefully the two ballots reproduced below.

Government Statutory Ballot Paper

Question 2.

ARE you in favor of the sale of light beer containing not more than two and fifty-one one hundredths per cent. alcohol weight measure through Government Agencies and amendments to the Ontario Temperance Act to permit such sale?

Question 3.

ARE you in favor of the sale of light beer containing not more than two and fifty-one one hundredths per cent. alcohol weight measure in Standard Hotels in local municipalities that by a majority vote favor such sale and amendments to the Ontario Temperance Act to permit such sale?

Question 4.

ARE you in favor of the sale of spirituous and malt liquors through Government Agencies and amendments to the Ontario Temperance Act to permit such sale?

Referendum Committee's Distortion

2. ARE you in favor of the SALE OF INTOXICATING BEER in Government Agencies?

3. ARE you in favor of the SALE OF INTOXICATING BEER in Standard Hotels?

4. ARE you in favor of the sale of all kinds of spirituous and malt liquor in Government Agencies?

The Government Ballot clearly shows that the public is only to vote for or against the sale of beer containing not more than 2.51 per cent. alcohol by weight.

BEER CONTAINING 2.51 PER CENT. ALCOHOL BY WEIGHT IS NON-INTOXICATING

To establish that the 2.51 per cent. beer to be voted on is not intoxicating, the Ontario Brewers' Association have deposited $5,000 with the Canada Permanent Trust Company, and they hereby challenge the Ontario Referendum Committee to deposit an equal amount with the same Trust Company to prove that beer containing 2.51 per cent. alcohol by weight is intoxicating, or admit that their literature is deceiving the electorate.

Upon the investigation, the losers are to forfeit their deposit to a charity or charities to be named by the Investigating Board. The investigation is to take place before a nominee of the Ontario Referendum Committee, a nominee of the Ontario Brewers' Association, and the third nominee to be agreed on by the two persons so chosen—and if they fail to agree, to be named by the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario.

This Challenge to be answered immediately by the Ontario Referendum Committee.

Obituary

Every and accident occurred on the Silver King Mine Road, near Cooper last Wednesday, when James Sexsmith the twelve year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Sexsmith was killed by the accidental discharge of a gun in the hands of his brother. The two young lads were out hunting with Mr. Lucas and he handed the gun to the younger of the two boys and in some manner the gun was discharged.

The funeral took place from his home at Cooper to Mr. Murney Smith's Madoc where service was held.

Besides the parents he leaves to mourn his loss the following Sisters, Mrs. Murney Smith, Madoc, Mrs. G. Lucas, Hungerford, Mrs. P. Marshall, Bogart, Brothers William, of Belleville, George, of Oshawa, Edmond and Earl at home.

Mr. Grier Roberts, of Belleville, is out of the hospital.

Mr. Charlie Casement spent a few days in town recently on his way to Winnipeg.

Rimington School Fair

An ideal Autumn day enabled hundreds of pupils to attend the Madoc and Elzevir Township School Fair at Rimington on Friday. Exhibits that would bear worthy comparison anywhere were shown by the pupils who are very enthusiastic competitors. Unfortunately tables and coops which were to come from Stirling did not arrive and this added to the labours of Mr. McIntosh and the Judges. The drill competition between the schools was very keen and Cooper won after a close contest. Of all the competitions in sports none brought forth more reluctant competitors than the Trustees 50-yd dash. However when these same Trustees were invited to bring forth their teachers for a race and they (the trustees) were lined up at the finishing point to secure the winners they showed no reluctance.

Everywhere the smiling faces of Inspector Minns and District Representative McIntosh bore testimony to the fulfillment of desires for the two officials are ambitious for the success of the school fairs and work early and late to increase the interest.

Wellington's New Theatre—The Empire will open on Tuesday and Wednesday October 7th and 8th with Guy Bros. Minstrels. This popular minstrel show is playing to crowded houses in the larger towns of Eastern Ontario. Twenty-five persons—Special Band—Orchestra—Scenery—Guy Bros. are new to Madoc Audiences, but have been playing return engagements on the larger circuits for years. This is Madoc people's first opportunity to enjoy an excellent entertainment in a modern, fireproof, comfortable, well lighted and perfectly ventilated theatre.

The Referendum Issue

The Herald has accepted a contract from the Citizens' Liberty League in reference to the coming Temperance vote. We accept this advertising not because we favor the opinion of the League, but as a newspaper is the medium through which the public is educated, we think it only fair that in this important question men of honest opinions should be given the opportunity of expressing their views. If the press and the platform were denied the liquor people they would plainly have a grievance.—Cambellford Herald.

The Ernie Marks Stock Co. No. 2 headed by Miss Verna Warde will open a three nights engagement at the Masonic Hall Madoc next Monday night. This Company having been secured by the Madoc Fair Association for Wednesday night.

The company is under personal direction of Mr. Will L. Phillips, he well known comedian and Madoc Theatre goers are assured of a big treat next week.

Each and every play produced is well cast. All members of the company being artists of unquestionable reputation Vaudeville specialties offered will be equal to those seen in the vaudeville theatres in the large cities Monday night the company will present "My Boy Jack" a comedy drama in four Acts. A special program has been selected for Wednesday night when some real novelties will be offered by these popular players. Remember the Ernie Marks Co. is the one playing for the benefit of the Madoc Fair and should receive the patronage of all fair boosters.

The Empire Theatre

During the last few years the cry of the world has been reconstruction. The future the present period will be known by historians as the reconstruction period. In this reconstruction period making epoch each town and city has done its part. Up till now the corner of Elgin and Main streets has been an eyesore to the citizens of Madoc. That corner has year after year produced a tangled mass of undergrowth and debris. Early this spring under the direction of Messrs Wellington and Taylor, workmen proceeded to bring order and beauty out of chaos, and day there stands on this corner a picture which for solidity, size and beauty is probably unequalled in any town in the Dominion of equal population.

The one part is for garage purposes and the other for entertainment purposes.

The Empire Theatre, owned by Mr. Stephen Wellington has been built for the purpose of expense seeking only comforts of his patrons. It is commodious in size, comfortably seated, brilliantly lighted, well heated and every safe guard has been provided for its patrons by sufficient fire.

Mr. Wellington secured for the opening night one of the most popular musical troops in Canada, determined to give the citizens of Madoc and surrounding country an unusual musical feast and his enterprise was well rewarded by the new building being filled to the doors and on the second night was found impossible to accommodate those seeking admission. The entertainment furnished by the Guy Bros. was of a very high order clean in moral and tone not a single joke during the whole evening inharmonia even in its suggestiveness.

Madoc Cheese

The cheese exhibit at the Madoc Fair this year was pronounced by Mr. P. H. P. who is recognized as the chief Cheese Judge of Canada, as showing the keenest competition that even he had ever judged. Some scored as high as 98.6% and out of the 52 cheese shown there were none under 95%. The cheese was purchased by James Cook for special delivery to England.

The Thankoffering meeting of the Women's Missionary Society of St. Peter's Church was held on the afternoon of Thursday, Oct. 2nd. The basement of the church was well filled, and all listened with interest to the address given

The Madoc Fair, 1919

After two years of most unfavorable weather the hearts of the members of the Madoc Agricultural Association were cheered with the prospect of fine weather and never in the history of the Association has there been brighter or clearer weather. It was a most beautiful October day, a day specially suited for outdoor Canadian life and well did our citizens take advantage of it. Never have so many people passed through the gates and paid admission to Madoc's great show. The gate receipts were almost a thousand dollars.

Never in the history of the fair have we seen a more peaceful crowd, freedom from everything of a coarse and vulgar nature.

What a contrast from our fairs of a few years ago, when drunkenness, swearing, fighting and accidents characterized these events. What higher eulogy could be pronounced on the operation of the no license system than was given on the Agricultural grounds last Wednesday.

A striking feature of the Agricultural shows of this year is the scarcity of entries in the purely farmer's department of the show. There has been a growing lessening of entries in sheep, pigs, cattle, and poultry and on making enquiries of this we are informed that it is due not to lack of interest in our fairs but to the difficulty of getting help.

In the Ladies department in number and quality were superior to those of former years, but we were surprised to find so few entries in the bread class and in asking the cause the cause the reply was "no specials this year."

Outside of the exhibits the interest was centered in the speeding contests which were the best that we have seen in Madoc for years; the basket ball which lacked the usual interest because there were no outside competitors, due to Madoc's superiority in this game. The midway in numbers and variety far outclassed those of former years. The exhibition of war trophies under the Madoc Branch of the G.W.V.A. attracted a large number of spectators. Outside of the tent which enclosed the exhibit were a German 4.1 field gun and a Howitzer captured in France. These together with the machine guns inside the tent were loaned by the Dominion Government. The rest of the exhibit consisting of automatic pistols, shells, bombs, grenades, helmets, both dress and khaki, gas masks and many mail war souvenirs which were collected overseas by local boys. Members of the G. W. V. A. explained the uses of the various articles and when possible told where and how many articles had been secured. The War Veterans also held a tag day and the joint proceeds amounted to considerable sum which will be used towards furnishing club rooms. The entertainment given by the Little Marks Co. in the Madoc H. under the auspices of the Agricultural Society was a pronounced success. The entertainment put on the boards was a play portraying the barrier that exists even in democratic countries between classes. The play was well written and features very strongly the distinction between the rich and the poor, the educated and the uneducated. The actors in this little drama played their parts in such a manner as to hold the attention of the audience (which completely filled the building) from the beginning to the end, and we have no hesitation in saying that the Marks Co will always meet with good houses in Madoc.

by Mrs. Graham brought fragrant memories of the time when as mistress of the Manse, she filled a large part in the life of Madoc. The loving esteem in which she was always held gave added weight to her earnest words, as she pictured the desperate need of men for the missionary forces. It came as a shock to most to hear that some hospitals on mission fields in our own land, and others in heathen lands, were closed for lack of workers, and that others were painfully handicapped and inefficient through lack of proper equipment. Mrs. Graham held up the high standard of the fourfold objective of the Forward Movement as an ideal for each woman present, and a few could fail to be touched by her fervent appeal.

Mrs. Rupert, the President, occupied the chair, and at the proper time, presented two life-membership certificates, one to Mrs. J. Whytock, from the society in recognition of her long years of service; and one to Miss Ida Brown from Mr. and Mrs. David Brown. The mission Band and others contributed vocal selections, and the Thank-offering amounted to over $150.00. The social half-hour at the close afforded an opportunity for Mrs. Graham's many

JOHN ROBERTSON

To the Voter

TO establish that the 2.51% beer to be voted on—the "Beer of the Ballot"—is not intoxicating, The Ontario Brewers' Association deposited $5,000 with the Canada Permanent Trust Company on September 16th.

On September 19th, The Ontario Brewers' Association formally challenged the Referendum Committee through the Press to deposit an equal amount with the same Trust Company to support their contention that this beer is intoxicating.

That challenge has never been accepted—clear admittance by the Referendum Committee they do not consider that they have a case. It is too late now to make the tests and render a decision before the day of voting—October 20th—but the failure of the Referendum Committee to answer our challenge will not be overlooked by the man or woman who votes on facts and evidence, and not on sentiment or false statements.

We again assert that 2.51% beer—"The Beer of the Ballot"—is not intoxicating. Tests have only recently been made which prove this conclusively—we will mail a copy of the test to anyone sufficiently interested to write for it.

Moreover, while the "Beer of the Ballot" has an alcoholic strength of but 2.51%, official tests made by the laboratory of the Inland Revenue Department—published in Bulletin 196—showed that the beers on general sale before The Ontario Temperance Act and Prohibition were enacted, had an alcoholic content ranging as high as 7.33% by weight measure—practically three times as strong as the beer to be voted on October 20th. Even such American beers as were sold in Canada and always spoken of as "very light, non-intoxicating beers," were over fifty per cent. stronger than the "Beer of the Ballot."

The "Beer of the Ballot" is a mildly stimulating, healthful and refreshing beverage, brewed from a high grade of malt and hops—containing only sufficient alcohol to make it digestible and nourishing.

CAMEO KIRBY

"I met him—once," replied Kirby, taking a deep breath. "I was proud of him," she continued steadily, refasting the miniature about her neck, "and I am not the less proud of him now. You have heard how he died? Then you understand why we do not know whose plantation this is: that we hold it at the mercy of—Cameo Kirby." She dragged forth the name with an accent and gesture of unspeakable fear and loathing.

"Your brother took Moreau's word for what happened that night, didn't he?" asked Kirby steadily. "Certainly. Had not Colonel Moreau shown himself my father's friend?" she returned.

"It seems to me that Moreau's word has gone for a good deal with your family," he commented, with veiled bitterness.

"And why not? Do we need any one's word upon a notorious adventurer who lives by gambling," she asked, with some asperity, "any one's word upon a creature who preyed upon the weakness of a good man like my father?"

"But has it ever occurred to you," he returned quietly, "that possibly this Kirby might never intend to claim the plantation?"

"No! No!" she interrupted vehemently, shaking her head. "He is too infamous. But I don't want to think of him today. A change has come over me, and—somehow the world is a different place." She stopped and then, with flushed cheeks and hurried breath, added: "I feel as if I had been living a long time in the shadows—shadows of dark and ugly thoughts. But it has lifted today somehow. What is it?"

She turned, asking the question with wondering eyes, her face transfigured.

"YOU KNEW MY FATHER?"

And as if the heavens, bearing out her statement, offered a sign which preaged future peace and happiness, a surcease from all tribulation and suffering, the final and complete obliteration of the shadows of the past, the homing sun, peeping from over the distant house, bestowed its last caress upon Adele Randall, transforming her somber dress into one of gaiety and splendor. True to M. Veaudry's prophecy, it appeared as if her long affected mourning was to be at length discarded; but, contrary to that gentleman's long cherished hopes, his was not the personality to induce the metamorphosis.

CHAPTER IX.

VEN a more obtuse and inexperienced man than Eugene Kirby would not have failed to interpret Adele's words and bearing, the cause of which was as yet beyond her understanding. Kirby knew that he was dealing with no coquette, who sought to pander to vanity or who considered all men the playthings of an idle hour. It was not so much Adele's words as her manner, which betrayed a frank liking and interest, which, despite his modest arguments to the contrary, could no longer be attributed to an impersonal regard for his safety and welfare. He saw that, unknown to herself, she was rapidly passing through the various stages of liking and interest, heading straight for that inevitable climax which is dignified by the term love. In view of the fact that he had already arrived there and had made every effort to assist her toward the same goal, the present misgivings and self censure which now assailed him were decidedly out of place.

True to his character, he had acted first and considered last. He had put forth every effort to please, to awaken her heart, and now that there were welcome experience he had forgotten his calling, his reputation—forgotten that he was a common gambler, with no claim upon such society as he was now enjoying—forgotten everything but that, by some miraculous fortune, he had been transplanted to the land of his dreams, and met its central figure and had promptly plunged head over heels in love.

Kirby's thorough if tardy self censure, however, was hardly justified, for he had made no conscious efforts to enlist Adele's regard, and their mutual attraction had been as instantaneous and spontaneous as it was natural and to be expected. But the knowledge of her identity had awakened him to a lively sense of his true position, and, although he was far from being the scoundrel which Moreau had pictured and Adele believed him, his regard for her clearly showed him that by remaining he was jeopardizing her future peace and happiness. He must save her from herself and from him, and no matter how difficult it would prove, kill her dawning interest, which naturally was based on the supposition that he was a gentleman privileged to associate with one of her standing. Filled with this resolution, he now turned and said:

"Miss Randall, you've been kinder to me than any woman ever was. You saved my life this morning. But my friend is right. I'd better go. Already you've helped me more than you ought."

Instantly the angelic, wrapt expression was spunged from her face, and, astonished, almost angry, she turned upon him.

"Why? What right have you to say that?" she demanded. "Do you think I don't want to?"

"No," he admitted. "But—but I can't stay."

"Do you want me to believe that you're afraid?"

"Yes, I'm afraid."

"Afraid because we expect the real Colonel Moreau tonight or tomorrow? I'm not afraid of his coming, and you can't make me believe that you are. I don't believe you were ever afraid of a man in your life." She stood very straight and looked into his eyes, an incredulous, challenging smile on her lips.

"No, I was never afraid of a man," he admitted quietly. "But I am afraid of—"

"Of me?" she whispered interpreting the pause.

"Yes," he said simply.

Her eyes battled to meet his own, but every effort proved futile, and at length, coloring vividly, she sought the garden seat, half turning her back, while he pre-empted the arm, toying restlessly with the white camellia he still carried.

"I gather from the stories you read the General," he continued, bending toward her, while he smiled half cynically, "that the bad prince always keeps following the beautiful princess, and of course she always finds him out. Now, it looks to me like a weakness in his character that he doesn't quit before she has the chance to. In my opinion, he's a fool to take the risk."

Her answer came tremulously, but withal brave and to the point.

"I suppose I could find a story in which she would want him to take the chance. Now—now, are you going to stay? turning and looking up, half daintily, into his eyes.

"I can't," he said doggedly. "And the sooner I go the better. Don't let anything ever make you sorry that you helped me. Goodbye." And, throwing the camellia on the bench, he resolutely offered his hand.

But she ignored the hand and picked up the discarded flower.

"Not yet, not yet," she whispered. "There is Ann calling me, and I must dress for dinner. But I shall expect to see you again before you leave. You will wait here? You may tell me goodbye then—if you wish to."

He bowed, seating himself dejectedly on the garden seat, while she flew into the house.

The sun had set, and twilight was fast approaching, the shadows of the trees blending in one solid gray palpable mass. It seemed as if the disappearance of the sun and Adele had been coincident, productive of the same effect. Without warning the day's work seemed to be clamoring for toll, demanding more than Kirby owned. He felt weary, spent, utterly forsaken and alone, the bleak and barren future stretching interminably before him. Hostage of his bitter humor, he was oblivious to the fact that the old negro, Croup, watching his opportunity, had stolen from the house and was now regarding him fixedly, and he started when at length the other timidly ventured to address him.

"Marse, yo' scuse me, sah. Could yo' be so 'blig' an' kind fo' me to ask yo' a question?" prefaced Croup, with a humble bow. "I got a very strong mumbunce o' de way yo' is favored in de proflie, but it must 'a' been a long time since yo' was here, kase I don't place yo' das right, specially by de name, sah."

"I have never been here before," replied Kirby truthfully.

"Well, I 'clah ole Croup got a rack his wool some, kase I knows yo' face as well as I knows my own. I bet I ain't goin' to get to sleep a wink tonight tryin' to 'membah whah it was I know yo', sah."

Amused by the other's evident perplexity, Kirby in his characteristic fashion temporarily dismissed his own trouble and said, with a smile: "Come, cheer up. It ain't as bad as that."

Instantly Croup turned, electrified, while he clasped both hands behind his back and said: "What yo' say, sah?" he cried. "Blame God, 'LAT Marse be here. 'LAT Marse be here. 'LAT Marse be here."

"B-sh! Don't call me that," warned he other, jumping to his feet. "No, sah. I don't say dat name no mo'," replied Croup, with an effort restraining his excitement and pleasure. "Twas your own pa done riz me, sah, an' yo' can trust me clean thro' to de bone. I'm Croup, what done knowed yo' was 'LAT marse. But what yo' doin' here? 'Tain't safe. Dey das natchally goin' to kill yo', Marse Gene. Honey, yo' must git off a dis land as quick as yo' kin."

"Thank you for the warning, Croup," said Kirby, offering his hand. "But don't you worry about me. I'm going. Can you get two horses for me? Good! Have 'em saddled and bring them around on the road."

As the old serving man ambled away Larkin Bunce appeared. The pithier gambler was thoroughly miserable with his surroundings and had decided to make a last appeal to his partner.

"Praise the Lord," he began earnestly, "that the nigger's given you sense enough to see that you've got to Go. You know where you are now, don't you? I heard you askin' for horses. Well, you kite for the river. I'm too fat to keep up, but I'll ketch you later on. Come. We can't get off too soon."

"B-SH! DON'T CALL ME THAT."

"I can't leave until I've seen Miss Randall," replied Kirby, with quiet finality. "I have told her that I would wait for her here."

"Why, you gosh 'mighty idiot!" exploded Bunce. "Don't you know Tom Randall's liable to be here any minute and a posse with him? If I could track you out here from New Orleans, he kin, kin't he? Ain't you ever goin' to quit dolt these reckless, fool things? Surely you ain't reached your time of life without knowin' what a woman means when she says 'wait a minute,' and she didn't even say that. You kin't wait for her, I tell you."

"I'd wait for her till the Lord quit making minutes," replied Kirby. "When she comes I'll go."

Once more Bunce helplessly appealed to an invisible audience for pity, for compassion, at this time being associated with an utter lunatic.

"You pore lost soul!" he finally groaned. "Do you think I don't know what's the matter with you? I seen you look at her. What business have you got hangin' around a lady, even if you wouldn't git shot for just comin' here? What chance have you got with a lady anyway? Ain't there women enough in the world? You know no lady would have anything to do with our kind. You got no business—"

"I don't hurt her if I only look at her, do I?" snapped Kirby, whirling upon his partner in sudden passion.

"My God, if a man's been outside the walls for years you can't blame him for wanting to look at the flowers a minute if he gets into the garden some day. That can't harm them."

"Gene, do you know you're crazy yourself?" sadly pronounced Bunce, with a shake of the head. "They say them loonies do know it sometimes. And a nice, crazy turn you done me, too, tryin' me up here with folks like these," he added, with vehement reproach as full realization of his many wrongs overcame him. "You kin't never had nothin' to say to no ladies, and as soon as I ever see one I choke up, and my neck gets hot and my accretary red. Interduced me as his accretary, again appealing to the invisible audience. "Waugh! Secretary! I'd make a h— of a secretary, wouldn't I? Come on, Gene. Foolsness looses from all this darn foolishness before it's too late."

"I've already given you my decision," interrupted Kirby, with some asperity. "But, Larkin, don't let my affairs detain you."

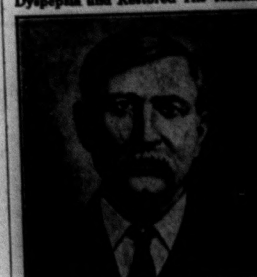

Bunce, after a farewell invocation of the heavens, resigned himself to the inevitable and, seating himself on the garden seat, proceeded to pick his teeth, while he fastened a plaintive and expectant eye on the distant house.

The partners sat in moody silence for some time until at length their reveries were interrupted by the advent of Judge Pleydell, Mr. Randall and M. Veaudry. The judge had but returned from the steamboat landing, and as he approached the occupants of the garden seat his expression was of so serious a character that Bunce, ever on the lookout for trouble, now accented danger and, nudging his companion, jumped to his feet. But Kirby, though wary eyed, remained outwardly cool and entirely self possessed and, embracing this heaven sent opportunity of further aggravating his partner, promptly introduced the latter as "my secretary."

"Colonel Moreau, sir," began the judge, somewhat astonished at the feignedness of Mr. Bunce's bow, "I have the

you. What would you say if I told you that you had no right to be here at all, sir?"

As Pleydell, preserving his stern demeanor, laid a hand on Kirby's shoulder, his companions exchanged startled and significant glances, while Mr. Bunce grew apologetic and edged nearer his partner. All eyes were now on Kirby, but his expression of mild surprise and courteous interest never changed.

"Well, I reckon I'd have to say that the joke was on me, Judge," he calmly replied.

Pleydell began to laugh.

"Well, sir, according to rumor, you don't here. According to rumor, you don't anywhere, because you're dead." To him it was a huge joke, and he roared until the tears mingled with his snowy mustache, all ignorant of the fact that he had propounded a literal truth: ignorant of the fact that his companions were still significantly eying each other and that Mr. Bunce was having exceeding difficulty with

"One Man in His Time."

Brimful of strange adventures was the life of James W. Rucroft, 46, of King Edward's Hotel, as it was described, when he was charged at Lancaster, England, with breaking into a shop at Morecambe and stealing jewellery valued at £778. He said that he had:

Served in the South African War. Been a gold miner and prospector in Klondike and Alaska.

Traded as a copra merchant in the South Sea Islands.

Worked on the Panama Canal.

Fought under President Castro in Mexico.

Was in the Boxer riots in China.

In Jamaica at the time of the great earthquake in 1907.

Worked on the Trans-Siberian Railway.

Assisted to quell the Sinn Fein rising in Ireland.

Fought in France and was severely wounded.

Following the shop-breaking which was done while he was on a sick leave, he sent valuable presents to his sister, gave rings to nurses at Colchester Hospital and other people in the town.

When arrested he had still £200 worth in his possession, and he helped the police to recover an additional £190 worth.

Sentence of twelve months' hard labor was passed upon him.

Only Four.

Some time ago, it will be remembered, the news came from Brno that two special trains were speeding southwestward from Vienna conveying "all the archdukes remaining in Austria, their suites and their baggage," en route for Switzerland. Now Switzerland is noted for her hospitality toward "the king in exile," but on this occasion, it appears, her hospitable heart failed her at the last moment. The Journal de Geneve, at any rate, announces that only four archdukes have been permitted by the Federal Government to come to Switzerland. All, moreover, have been required to give an undertaking "to abstain from politics and propaganda." The fact of the matter is that the exile business is becoming too large to remain any longer unregulated.

Army Nurses in Peace Times.
There is a corps of regular army

Deaf Mutes Not Good Flyers.
Contrary to a report which has been widely scattered, deaf mutes do not make good flyers, as has been shown by recent tests made by the war department, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. This branch of the government is endeavoring to ascertain the source of the false report, which has led many young men to seek enlistment as flyers. In examining a number of deaf mutes it has been found that they are lacking in an adequate sense of equilibrium.

of Health

And How it May be Carried Out With Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

You sometimes hear it said that the most important Rules of Health is "Daily movement of the bowels." Constipation begins with the bowels but it does not end there. You must also consider the way it affects the liver, the kidneys, the digestive system, and in fact the whole human body. Headaches, backaches, aching limbs, indigestion, biliousness, kidney derangements, appendicitis, and the most serious diseases imaginable often have their beginning with constipation of the bowels. There is one treatment which has a direct and combined action on the bowels, the liver and the kidneys, and gets these organs into good working order in remarkably quick time, and that is Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. They afford relief quickly, but they do more than that. They positively cure constipation, and insure lasting regularity of the bowels by setting the liver right. Mr. M. Lock, 30 Home street, Brockville, Ont., writes: "For many years I have been troubled with constipation and have tried a number of remedies, but without obtaining much benefit. About a year ago I started taking Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and have found them to be the best medicine for constipation that I have ever used. I would strongly advise anyone troubled with this complaint to try the same remedy." Mrs. R. Childs, Harriston, Ont., writes: "I suffered from constipation and kidney trouble for some time. One day I bought some of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills to see if they would help me, and to my delight I received great benefit from them in a short time. They are a splendid medicine, and I always keep them on hand as a household remedy." Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are so universally used as a treatment for constipation and liver and kidney troubles that you can obtain them at any store where medicines are on sale. One pill a dose; 25 cents a box. Edmondson, Bates & Co., Ltd., Toronto.

BRINGS HOME HUN SAVAGERY

Contrast of Present War With That of the Spanish-American Conflict Twenty Years Ago.

One night, 20 years ago, I sat in an army camp in Cuba during the San Jacinto campaign, listening to a discussion of war weapons. That day some 2,000 men had been killed or wounded in a three hours' battle, which involved all of Shafter's army corps at San Juan hill and at El Caney. The matter which created the most comment was the very small per cent of mortalities in the casualty list. The wounded would nearly all recover, and, except here and there, without permanent injury. Two American staff officers were discussing it and praising the Mauser rifle, which the Spaniards were using. I remember substantially the words of one of the staff officers. He said: "It is a more merciful weapon than the Krup, which we are using, because it is of smaller bore, makes a cleaner wound and puts the other fellow out of business just as effectively as the Krup does without inflicting as dangerous an injury."

I remember that they both agreed that the science of modern war was to knock the other fellow out without inflicting him. I thought of that old American conception of that twenty-year-old period while sitting yesterday in a hospital where Americans were being brought in from the field. Some of the men are indescribably mangled; some wounds lie open as though they had been made with a cleaver—others are of the crushed, ragged kind. I went from this disagreeably wounded ward into a neighboring tent, where 200 mangled men with bandaged eyes tossed restlessly. As I thought of the desperately wounded I had just left, and of those poisoned men, called upon to defend themselves against an inhuman weapon which gave them no chance to strike blow for blow, I realized the utter savagery to which we have reverted since that gentle day in which we sank the Spanish navy and made guests of the Spanish army until the hour arrived when we might send the conquered home in chivalry and in honor—Kansas City Times.

Overcoming Hay Fever.
Hay fever is gradually becoming better understood. From the public health reports, it appears that recent investigations have shown only one person in a hundred to be susceptible, while the susceptibles differ widely in the effects produced on them by the various plant pollens that give rise to the disease. In the eastern and southern United States pollen of the ragweed finds the greatest number of sensitive subjects, the spring type of hay fever being therefore the most common. The smaller number of persons who are affected by grass pollen have the autumnal type of fever. Some persons have both the spring and the autumnal fevers, and about 8 per cent of the susceptibles are sensitive not only to the ragweed and grass pollens, but to various other pollens, including some tree pollens. Such unfortunate are liable to hay fever attacks throughout most of the year. Some patients are affected only when the specific pollen is at its greatest abundance, but others have the disease during the entire season of the plant's pollination.

a Plane is Operated." In a "Talk on Aerial Tactics," which appeared in the publication "National Service," Canada's famous Ace of Aces, Col. William A. Bishop, V.C., D.S.O., M.C., D.P.C., describes some effective methods employed in aerial fighting.

To those who have never seen a war machine," says Col. Bishop, I would explain that to control one the pilot has to manipulate but a single lever, which we call the 'joy stick.' It is very much like the lever with which you shift gears on an automobile, but it moves in four directions. If you should want your machine to go down, the instinctive move would be to lean the body forward. Therefore, the fighting airplane is so rigged that when the pilot pushes the 'joy stick' forward the nose of the machine points down. In the same way, if he pulls the 'joy stick' back the nose of the machine goes up and the machine climbs at the angle he wants it to. In turning it is necessary that the machine is not bank too much. This is one of the first things a pupil is taught when learning to fly. The 'joy stick' also controls the banking. By moving it to either side you can tilt up which-ever wing is desired. At his feet the pilot has a rudder bar which controls the horizontal direction of the machine. If he pushes his left foot forward and banks slightly, the machine turns slowly to the left. To go to the right there is only necessary a push with the right foot and a slight bank. The pilot thus has both feet on the rudder bar, holds the 'joy stick' with his right hand and with the left controls the angle of the machine by holding the 'joy stick.' He is always able to do anything he wishes either with the engine or the machine itself.

When firing the gun he simply moves his thumb slightly along the 'joy stick' and presses the lever which pulls the trigger. To be able to fight well a pilot must have absolute control over his machine. He must know by the 'feel' of it exactly how the machine is, what position it is in and how it is flying, so that he may manoeuvre rapidly and at the same time watch his opponent or opponents. He must be able to loop, turn his machine over on its back and do various other flying stunts. Not that these are actually necessary during a combat, but from the fact that he has done these things several times he gets absolute confidence, and when the fight comes along he is not worrying about how the machine will act. He can devote all his time to fighting the other fellow, control of his machine coming instinctively. Thus the actual flying, although perhaps the hardest to train a man for, is the least important factor in aerial fighting. A man's flying ability may be perfect. He may be able to control the machine and handle it better than anyone, but if he goes into a fight, risking his life many times, perhaps, to gain the right position for a good shot and then fails to hit the mark, he is useless.

"If unable to bring his opponent down he must further hazard his life in order to get out and away from the enemy. For this reason I consider aerial gunnery the most important factor in fighting in the air. Tactics are next in importance, because by the proper use of the right tactics it is easy to eliminate risks and also to put the enemy at a great disadvantage. Surprise is always to be striven for, because if you can surprise the enemy and get into the proper position to shoot before he is aware of your presence it simplifies matters tremendously, and there should be no second part to the fight."

One Agent in Rumania.
Col. Joe Boyle, well known to Canadians for the leading part he has played in Rumanian affairs, described the past two years, his going to Bucharest as the Canadian agent in Rumania. Col. Boyle will superintend the distribution of Canadian exports to that country and protect Canadian interests generally under the terms of our agreement with that country. Canada, it will be remembered, is supplying $25,000,000 worth of many factored articles, raw materials and foodstuffs to Rumania, and has advanced a credit to that amount. Col. Boyle, who is acknowledged to possess a remarkable influence in Rumanian affairs, was accompanied by Capt. J. C. Baillargeon, former manager of a branch of the Bank of Montreal; F. P. Douglas, formerly of the Klondike, secretary, and Capt. H. E. Webb, who will superintend the erection of agricultural machinery. Representatives of various British firms are seeking business, such as a supply of railway rolling stock, structural steel, etc., and accompanied the Canadian party.

Col. Boyle, speaking from his intimate knowledge of the country, said conditions in Rumania were settled, and the people loyal to their rulers. If they were fed and clothed they would be a solid bulwark against Bolshevism, one-third of the line against which Rumania is now fighting. It was a wealthy country, having exported over $27,000,000 worth of production in 1911. Lacking seed, the crops would not be normal until next year, but there were enormous undeveloped resources, including waterpower, which were now to be taken in hand. Rumania was a perfectly safe investment for Canada. Apropos the title abolition in Canada, Col. Boyle declared that he was a Rumanian prince. "That title," he said, "was fastened on to me by an American newspaperman with enterprising imagination."

A "Joker."
A "joker" is a word or clause of innocent appearance, inserted in a bill before Parliament in such a way as to make the bill mean something which some who voted for it did not think it meant. Thus members are sometimes entrapped into voting for a bill which they would have opposed had they understood its real purport.

MAKES BUTTER
8 SIZES OF GLASS AND METAL
The DAZEY cannot be compared with any other churn on the market because there is such an immense difference. The DAZEY is not an imitation; it is an entirely new departure in churn making. It is better, just think of the difference between this churn and the old style dash, or wooden churns that take at least one-half hour to churn, sometimes two hours. Surely your time is worth 15c per hour. At this rate the DAZEY would save you $25.00 every year or many times its cost.
THE DAZEY IS AS EASILY CLEANED AS A TIN PAIL. Because the receptacle which holds the cream is removable from the gearing, and as there are no rough or uneven surfaces or butt-joints inside.
DAZEY
The DAZEY Makes More Butter Than Any Other Churn Out of the Same Amount of Cream. This can be easily proved by turning one-half of your cream in any churn and then waiting the better part of the next day before the butter will rise. The DAZEY receptacle cannot absorb a particle of butter fat or moisture and therefore will never become soiled. There is nothing about the DAZEY to wear out. There are no complicated parts, very simple, true light and will last for years.

Victory Loan

Mr. Wm. B. Deacon, President of the Deacon Shirt Co., Ltd., has again accepted the invitation of Sir Henry Drayton, Minister of Finance, to act as chairman for Hastings County in the coming Victory Loan 1919.

Mr. Deacon's patriotic acceptance of the important position of chairman should again be incentive for the people of Hastings to once more come out in the wholehearted support of this great national issue, this being the third time he has headed the county campaign.

The chairman will be assisted by Mr. W. B. Evans as County Organizer. Mr. Evans has acted in this capacity for the past two years with great credit to himself and the organization. He will be assisted in this campaign by Capt. A. C. H. Andrews, M. C. of Toronto, formerly of the 15 Overseas Battalion, C. E. F., who has lately returned from France.

Mr. H. W. Ackerman has also accepted the position of Secretary in which capacity he acted during the two former Victory Loan campaigns. His unselfish devotion to this arduous work contributed greatly in the past to the efficiency of the organization and his acceptance is announced with pleasure.

The headquarters for the new loan will be at 191 Front St., Belleville. Messrs. Thompson and Barge having consented to sublet part of their furniture store for this great work. The county organization will be in operation this week.

The campaign will open on October 27th and close on November 15th.

Detlor

We have had some pretty heavy storms wind, sleet and electrical, but the farmers have all managed to get their crops harvested in pretty good condition and nearly all have in and about, and we learn some of them have had good returns considering the exceedingly hot and dry weather.

Messrs. Corneal and Mason are making the threshing machine hum and spin along the road, and are going out of our own districts.

The U. F. O. shipped a lot more stock on Saturday last. Mr. McWhirten is salesman for some of the U. F. O. Clubs and seems to be having fair success. Owing to the U. F. O. some other people have to bend their back and earn their own living instead of some other person selling them stock at half price the buyer making more profit than the man gets for the animal and work and material food for feeding. "It's a long lane that has no turn."

Mr. and Mrs. Ed Corneal, accompanied Mr. and Mrs. H. Crawford to Queensboro and Mr. Corneal has accepted a position. Mrs. Corneal is preparing to move to Queensboro. There are some swell hits of parties these days. One at least a week to enliven the spirit of the next foot to the fantastic too.

The World's Exhibition at Bancroft Oct. 2nd and 3rd. "Join the Motor League." "Leave your number off, and you're all right." Wonder what they will have to represent the farmer at Bancroft Fair? It will likely be a Motor League Representative, an automobile and a jack-ass. You old Hayseed, what do you want of anything or your family? a pair of undressed cowhides, dressed with red taller, a carsey shirt uttuned on the shoulder and a pair of full-cloth trousers, accompanying a smock, cap and andana, raise pigs at 10c a lb., etc., etc. "It's a long way to justice." We have omitted, unintentionally the partial completion of the town hall at Detlor, at least to the extent that it is in shape to use. The Metropolis is in its infancy.

The Sunday School Convention held on Sept. 10th, was a fair success, some of the people who intended going were too ill. The able address delivered by Rev. Reading, Davey, Patten and Ferguson (resident) were on the different subjects of discussion respectively. Value and Purpose of our Sunday School, The Teacher in Relation to Scholars, The Sunday School Ceholar and the Referendum, were very interesting to both the young and old. The Musciv Choir furnished some really good music for rural district. A lunch was served between sessions.

One would think there was no Sunday to see people prowling about over people's property on Sundays with dogs and guns, from snow off until snow on.

Those Ebony Idols. What a boom. A car, no matter what you do, well they have bought a car. "It can go," and speed, speed! my, no use, accept the inevitable. If you get hurt, well, it's your fault. It's a car, got to pay a license. If you don't want to get hurt get out of the road, and they are great for robbing. Robbing of all sorts. If you try to get anything for remuneration you are robbed of justice, if they want a road you are robbed to pay for it, if they want what you have raised they go and take it, no use trying to do anything they have to live, if they want anything to wear they go and take it. Get in the car, 10 miles an hour (—) and they are out of your reach. Good drivers never go over 10, 12, or 15 miles an hour, unless they are in a hurry, but they have the liberty and if they want money, why just go and take it, it's no trick to get away in a car, and then if you haven't a car it's no trick to throw the number and take the car, maybe you can find somebody who will trust you for an honest person and buy it, but it is not to be wondered at that people are being injured and are sent about their business if they are simple enough to try to run up against the capable man at a car, with their suffering are ruled to pay the costs. One gets off, another gets off and no fault or blame can be attached to the car driver? The suffering are robbed of their rights and the robbery grows daily in different respects. A Doctor Beeman was heard to say before some people "that if he had been as near being the death of two people as a certain person was of others he would try and make some remuneration, their life and health was worth as much as the car, for that and other damages and not not have a case in court. It's a motor and a car. They rule the world.

Wedding Bells

St. Peter's Presbyterian Church.
Madoc was the scene of a pretty wedding on Tuesday morning, Sept. 30th, at half past ten past ten when Lyla Hallstone, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. Hallstone, became the bride of Mr. George Holland.

The bride wore a becoming suit of navy blue with hat to match and carrying a sheaf of white Asters, was given away by her father. She was attended by her cousin Miss A. Mc-Beath.

The groom who was one of our gallant soldiers, enlisted at an early stage of the war in the 10th Battalion at Medicine Hat. He was taken prisoner at the second battle of Ypres, in April 1915, and was a prisoner till after the armistice was signed.

He was ably supported by his brother
Mr. Alfred Holland who is also a veteran of the Great War.

The ceremony was solemnized by the Rev. H. Graham, of Marshburn, a former pastor of St. Peter's and an intimate friend of the family; in the presence of about seventy guests.
The wedding march was most ac-ceptably rendered by Mr. Hocking.

After the signing of the register
the party proceeded to the home of the bride, where they partook of breakfast.

The house and church were both beautifully decorated for the occasion with autumn leaves and flowers.
The happy couple left amid best wishes and showers of confetti for their honeymoon at Niagara Falls

Sunny South Co.

That uncommonly strong combination of colored talent, known as the J. C. Rockwell "Sunny South" company, the show that never disappoints, the one that never misrepresents, is announced to appear in the New Empire Theatre, Saturday evening, October 18th. This company has been seen here several times and it has always made good every promise, delivering the goods just as advertised.
As on its former visits it will be found to be clean to a fault and during the entire performance there is not a line, an action nor an insinuation to which exception can be taken.
There is every ingredient of gayety, melody and it is illuminated with an Olio of topnotch and refined vaudeville stunts, of the better class, the kind that are seldom seen outside the larger cities. From curtain to curtain it is snappy, gingery and well calculated to drive away the blues.
Mr. Rockwell does not believe in putting the greater part of his salary allot ment into one or two acts and allowing the balance of the performance to suffer through the employment of cheaper ones, which always disgusts the experienced patron, but he has found that the expenditure of money for the purpose of making each act and detail complete pays twice over in the boxoffice receipts.
This explains why the performances given by this company are always up to the minute and sends the audience home feeling satisfied they have received full value for their money.

There is plenty of fun in the performance, in fact it was built for laughing purposes only and it is generally conceded to be one of the funniest shows since time began.

The organization is accompanied by an excellent solo concert band and a superb orchestra. The "Koon-town" parade, a decided novelty, takes place at 3 pm.

Admission 35, 50 and 75 cents

Ivanhoe School Fair

The demonstration took place in the Ivanhoe public school building before a large and deeply interested group of spectators. For purposes of illustration 24 pupils were selected from Ivanhoe school to whom the work were entirely unknown. The work of preparation, serving and clearing the tables etc., was done by four small girls from Miss Bird's own school who were thoroughly familiar with all the processes involv-

White oilcloths were spread over the desks and two hungry pupils were seated at each double desk.
The dishes were placed and then the serving began. The menu consisted of vegetable soup, potatoes beef and bread and butter and fruit for the dessert with cocoa for drink. While the serving and eating was going on Miss Bird illustrated her method of teaching the children etc., etc.

Miss Bird has a system or method of preparation worked out that proceeds like the working of a clock.

How the last Victory Loan was spent

For Demobilization

For Trade Extension

BEFORE buying Victory Bonds again you may want to know how Canada used the money you loaned her last year.

Canada borrowed the money to carry on the war and to provide credits for Great Britain and our Allies.

CONSIDERABLY more than one-half of the Victory Loan 1918 was spent on our soldiers. This included $312 900 000 for paying them feeding them bringing them home separation allowances to their dependents maintenance of medical services and vocational training schools.

$9 000 000 was spent at Halifax for relief and reconstruction after the disaster.

Other disbursements were not strictly speaking expenditures but National Re-investments.

To Great Britain for example

$173 500 000 was loaned for the purchase of our wheat and cereals.

$9 000 000 for our fish.

$30 000 000 for other Foodstuffs.

$2 900 000 for Canadian built ships.

$5 500 000 to pay other British obligations in Canada.

Making in all $220 900 000 advanced to Great Britain.

To our Allies we loaned $8 200 000 for the purchase of Canadian foodstuffs raw material and manufactured products.

The Re-investments will be paid back to Canada in due time with interest.

These credits were absolutely necessary to secure the orders for Canada because cash purchases were impossible.

They have had the effect of tremendously helping agricultural and industrial workers to tide over the depression that would have followed the Armistice had we not made these credit loans.

As far as money is concerned 1919 has been and is so—just as much a war year as 1918. Our main expenditures for war cannot be completed until well on into 1920. Thus another Victory Loan is necessary—Get ready to buy.

Victory Loan 1919

"Every Dollar Spent in Canada"

Issued by Canada's Victory Loan Committee in co-operation with the Minister of Finance of the Dominion of Canada.

Raisuli.

Few men have succeeded in maintaining themselves so long in the limelight as the Moroccan brigand chieftain, Raisuli. From the day of his first great adventure, some sixteen years ago, when he kidnapped the correspondent of the London Times, and held him up for ransom, down to the present time he has kept the world speculating as to what he would do next. In the early days of his career, Raisuli's great specialty was undoubtedly kidnapping. Following closely upon the capture of the Times' correspondent, came the historic descent on Ion Perdicaris and Cromwell Varley, American and British subjects, respectively, which led to the arrival in Tangier Bay of six American warships with a demand, in the end successful, for "release and restoration" within a specified time. Four years later, it was the turn of Gen. Sir Harry Maclean, commander of the Sultan's bodyguard, to fall into the hands of the brigand and to regain his liberty only after a substantial ransom had been paid. Since then, Raisuli has been paid, broken loose again, reformed and, just now, Spain, after paying him a "good salary" to keep quiet for several years, is faced with a grand revolt of the tribesmen led by their redoubtable chieftain. "Old Raisuli," says the latest word from Tangier, "have been forgotten, and the mountain tribes are once more united under Raisuli, now more powerful than ever."

The Chinese Labor Corps.

Of all the changes made in individuals by the war there are probably none more striking than those of the people of China are now noting in the returning Chinese who served in the war zone under the standard of the Chinese Labor Corps. Something like 100,000 Chinese worked for the allied nations at all kinds of labor connected with the progress of the war in France and Belgium, earning all told the estimated sum of $6,000,000, practically all of which returns to their native country. Taken from various parts of China, they were put under military discipline, taught efficiency according to western standards, and subjected to conditions of life in an altogether different human environment, that has, so to speak, "made new Chinese" of them. The question that the best thought of China is now considering is what shall be done with them, and plans are being discussed to keep these former members of the Chinese Labor Corps together and use their improved capabilities on Government work. Even if they scatter, however, these 100,000 western trained workers will surely be an influence for good in the life of the nation.

More Sheep.

East and West have at least one desire in common at the present moment and that is for more sheep. Thus the Japanese Government have recently taken up the matter with vigor, and regulations issued in Tokio provide that farmers of others, in groups of not less than five, in separate communities, who buy sheep to raise for their wool, may receive Government assistance, and the importation of sheep is also to be encouraged with bounties. The Japanese Government is also managing a model farm and supplying sheep to individual farmers. Like other countries, Japan has been taught by war conditions the wisdom of having at home a sufficient supply of raw materials, and if the present campaign succeeds, the average small farmer will soon be able to capture a quotation from a famous poet and sing:

The snowy lambs are springing
In clover green and soft.
As he watches his little Government-assisted flock.

Her Favorite.

Jack—I think I'll send Edith a bouquet. What are her favorite flowers?
Tom—The most expensive ones.

Chemistry.

The interest in chemistry and chemical products has greatly increased in Canada owing to the fact that this country has been forced by the war to depend upon its own resources in this direction. The following uses are ascribed to these chemical products in making soap and paper pulp, mercerizing cotton and purifying mineral oils, caustic soda is used; soda ash is necessary in the manufacture of soap and glass; silicate of soda (better known as water glass) is utilized in the manufacture of soap and in dyeing and printing; calico, finishing cotton goods, preventing wood rot, bleaching jute and preserving eggs.

The War Toronto.

Something sentimental attaches to the good ship, War Toronto, which has just sailed down the St. Lawrence. She is the last wooden ship to be built for the Imperial Munitions Board in Canada, since vessels of her type are no longer needed to transport munitions to the war zone. She carries a cargo of about 1,500,000 feet of lumber which she will discharge at a British port. Her type is a type of a bygone day, but it is a type to which all honor is due, and no record of the war would be complete unless her name were inscribed upon the honor roll.

Greek Enterprise.

One of the great needs "in the circle of the Aegian," as it is called everywhere at present, is for manufacturing goods. And Athens is to stage an exhibition of such things, on a large scale. The Greek Government has placed at its disposal the famous "Zappeion" building, close to the Royal Palace, whilst adjoining land is to be used for the purpose of an extension in which to place the larger exhibits. Greece is certainly rising, with a will, to meet her new and enlarged responsibilities in the Near East. This is but another case in point.

Asphalt in Philippines.

A rich deposit of asphalt has been discovered in the Philippines located so near the water edge that no inland transportation whatever is necessary.

German Dog of Justice.

"The pigeons in Belgium," says Robert Whitlock in Everybody's for September, "had almost as hard a time of it as the people themselves. At Nivelles, a poor man had some carrier pigeons and the Belgians' love for them. But he had no food for them and so was obliged to kill them. His children cut off their heads and ranged them along a window sill, and underneath wrote: 'Died for their country.' The Germans saw the little heads and the inscription and the man was sent for 15 days to the Kommandatur and fined 200 francs."

Not Guilty.

Lawyer—I suppose you fellows are forever trying to produce artificial life?

City Hall, St. Paul, Minn., Sept. 15, 1919.

Ekaterinburg is the east Russian city to which the Kolchak Government, set up at Omsk, Siberia, is reported to be moving its headquarters. Ekaterinburg, geographically, is well adapted to be a gateway through which the Siberian Government seeks to spread its influence and oppose Bolshevism in European Russia. It is the most important city in the Ural Mountains, lying about 310 miles by rail southeast of the city of Perm, and in the erstwhile government of that name. Two-thirds of the Perm district lies in Russia and one-third in Siberia. Through Ekaterinburg passed the great Siberian highway. Ivan III sent German spies into what he regarded as a Promised Land of natural resources, and when they brought back favorable reports the task of developing one of the richest mining regions in the one-time empire began.

This same Ivan III laid the foundation of Russia's material progress in other ways. He summoned an architect from Venice, who was commissioned not only to build palaces and churches, but to make his bells, cannons, to fire off the said cannons, and the sort of casting very cunningly. His name was Murell, but small wonder that he was nicknamed Aristotle. For these protean services he received ten rubles a month.

As early as the eleventh century Novgorod began to exact tribute from the Perm district and to send settlers there. But when Ivan III, four centuries later, reached out from Moscow to Novgorod, deported a thousand of the wealthy families, and sent Moscow patriots to take their places, Perm was automatically released from Novgorod domination.

But the development of the mine region of the East Urals began with Peter the Great, during whose time Ekaterinburg, the Scranton of the Urals, was founded. It was as slow in growing as were many of Peter's reforms in taking root. In contrast to the rapid experiments now launched before Lenin's breakfast in Russia, it is interesting to recall the storm of protest against the census instituted by Peter, because it was a "profane numbering of the people," or against the change in the story 'the years of Our Lord,' and of that freakish, if harmless, edict requiring beards to be shaved off, which was regarded as an insidious scheme to disfigure the image of God, so Christ would not recognize His Own at the Judgment Day.

Peter named the city for his wife, later the Tsaritsa Catherine I, that strange figure in Russia's bizarre history, who was the daughter of a yeoman, foster child of a humble pastor, wife of a Swedish dragoon, sold after being taken prisoner of war to a Russian prince who fancied her, paramour of Peter the Great until the birth of a child impelled him to acknowledge her as his wife, to crown her empress consort, and to clear the way for her succession to the throne.

No Queen of proudest birth ever did (or would have wished to) adorn herself as did erstwhile Martha Skovronsky at the coronation ceremonies. Her crown bore more than 2,500 gems, with a walnut size ruby sustaining a bejeweled cross.

When Peter took her to Berlin the daughter of Emperor Frederick William, father of Frederic the Great, wrote in a volume preserved as her memoirs, that the couple appeared to be "two boys, and that she wore so many decorations that her dress rattled. The Paris verdict of her remains unknown because Peter left her at Amsterdam when he went to the French capital. It is not fair to assume that the monarch sought a free field for a gay time. Rather he seemed depressed by the refinements there and it seemed as saying, 'I am a soldier; a little bread will be satisfied me.'

Like Cleopatra, Du Barry, and other royal courtesans, Catherine was far from beautiful; positively homely, from most accounts. But when she ascended the throne her common sense redeemed her lack of beauty. Her gown-laden crown, and the luxury and power it stood for, did not turn her head, while other head-dresses tell the story of her devotion to her husband and of loyalty to her people. When she accompanied Peter in the Cagliari campaign she made the supreme sacrifice (for pre-Revolutionary village days) of "bobbing" her hair, and wearing a close-fitting fur cap to protect her from the sun. She also set a fashion of wearing the cocked hat of the army.

The former Russian Government maintained an important mining school, chemical laboratory and gold assay office at Ekaterinburg. Imperial industry works were engaged in cutting and polishing malachite, marble, porphyry and jasper and the Government mint for copper coins was located there.

The city also was important industrially and commercially. Paper, soap, candles and machinery were manufactured. It had flour mills and tanneries. Its trade was in cereals, silk goods, iron and cattle.

Ekaterinburg in the east Russian city to which the Kolchak Government, set up at Omsk, Siberia, is reported to be moving its headquarters. Ekaterinburg, geographically, is well adapted to be a gateway through which the Siberian Government seeks to spread its influence and oppose Bolshevism in European Russia. It is the most important city in the Ural Mountains, lying about 310 miles by rail southeast of the city of Perm, and in the erstwhile government of that name. Two-thirds of the Perm district lies in Russia and one-third in Siberia. Through Ekaterinburg passed the great Siberian highway. Ivan III sent German spies into what he regarded as a Promised Land of natural resources, and when they brought back favorable reports the task of developing one of the richest mining regions in the one-time empire began.

This same Ivan III laid the foundation of Russia's material progress in other ways. He summoned an architect from Venice, who was commissioned not only to build palaces and churches, but to make his bells, cannons, to fire off the said cannons, and the sort of casting very cunningly. His name was Murell, but small wonder that he was nicknamed Aristotle. For these protean services he received ten rubles a month.

Romance never dies, for lovers are born each springtime and the heart of the world is always young.

And so it is that to the modern thunder of the guns bombarding Solsoons is set the tune of an old, old romance that has spun like a gold-and-scarlet thread through eight changeable centuries, spun and spun, and lost none of its color, none of its appeal. And the story winds about the town of Solsoons and ends in a crumbling old tower dropping to its last decay.

And the romance was the tragedy of Abeldar and Heloise, lovers who have typified the passion of devotion to all the lovers of the universe. The story itself was not uncommon—the love of a teacher for his beautiful pupil, her eluding and her undoing. The tale of Faust has the same harsh note of betrayal. But it is the supreme devotion of Abeldar and Heloise that makes them types; that, and the setting of the romance which ran through Paris and other towns, and drew to a close in the tower where Abeldar was a prisoner of those persecutors who held his writings to be seditious. His marriage to Heloise, his renunciation of her, and the final taking, by both of them, of the vows that sent her to a nunnery and him to a monastery, all of this availed him nothing. There in the town of Solsoons, lighted now by the blaze of bursting shells, he was compelled to burn with his own hand his book in which was set forth the "heresy" of which he was accused. What a contrast between the feeble light of that burning manuscript and the flare of the battle we are waging for the liberties of the world!

And yet the burning of that book was a momentous event at the Solsoons council of ecclesiastics.

But Abeldar had been a great teacher, and all the country had thrived and thrived with the serial story of his romance with the beautiful Heloise. And so, in the later years travelers have turned aside from the beaten tracks and sought the old tower on the outskirts of the French town for a glimpse of the prison where he languished. The steps were worn in grooves by the thousands of feet that went as on a pilgrimage to the shrine of a perfect love.

There today the guns roar and the shells take their screaming flight—there at Solsoons—but under the curtain of smoke and on the hill of lead there pins on and on the gold-and-scarlet thread of the romance that never dies.—Memphis Commercial Appeal.

Jerusalem Gets Water.

For the first time since the days of Herod, Jerusalem has a good supply of pure water, the British having provided it in the first year of their occupation. The city has relied for its supply on rain water which flowed into underground cisterns of almost every house. These were found in bad repair and many of them needed cleaning. The water from King Solomon's Pool was led by the Romans through an aqueduct, but this was not nearly enough, and now the Turks it was divided to the Mount of Olives and the city of Jerusalem. The British found some old pipes and they replaced the old pipes with new ones. A new pipe line from the top of a hill, whence it used to gravity through a new pipe line into the city. The new pipes were laid on the surface and the old pipes were filled on condition that they are first cleaned and repaired. Water consumption has increased tenfold. The old pipes had been examined and the water of the old pipes was found to be dirty.

Air-Service Dress.

Air service officers must wear regulation dress or become subject to disciplinary action.

An order to this effect has been sent from air service headquarters to the various air sections and stations. It has been inspired by the practice adopted by some air service officers of wearing split coats, bellows pockets and roll collars, which may be comfortable but are not regulation.

When a squadron commander recently lined up all his flyers for an unexpected and unheralded inspection, a lot of them looked nice but were not garbed as it is written in the manual, "25—mum," mused the squadron chief. "You—and you—and you—wait on, wait on forward one pace." "I don't suppose you can fix the pockets yourselves," continued the major. "And I don't suppose you can fix the collars, either. But you can fix those splits in the back. Go to your quarters and sew them up."—Paris Stars and Stripes.

German Dog of Justice.

"The pigeons in Belgium," says Robert Whitlock in Everybody's for September, "had almost as hard a time of it as the people themselves. At Nivelles, a poor man had some carrier pigeons and the Belgians' love for them. But he had no food for them and so was obliged to kill them. His children cut off their heads and ranged them along a window sill, and underneath wrote: 'Died for their country.' The Germans saw the little heads and the inscription and the man was sent for 15 days to the Kommandatur and fined 200 francs."

McClary's Kootenay

TOP, bottom and all four sides of the Kootenay oven are evenly heated. That is why it is so famous as a dependable baker. There is a thermometer, too, to tell whether the heat is right or not.

No range is quite so easily managed. Duplex grates clear the ashes at a single turn. Burnished cooking-top never needs blacked. Nickled steel oven walls are kept clean with a damp cloth. Well-fitted joints and dampers hold the fire—and the oven heat—for hours.

Make them over

In the present high price of medicine, we will surely come back to the old-fashioned remedies. For the war most of us got out of the war with our health as children. We have recently come to the realization that the time involved was more than was saved by that effort. However, as things are, the time involved is well the result of that condition. Often in a discarded box of your own you will find a remedy which if used, will be enough for the little girl's

"SHE withstood everything in the field and above all was, and still is, the last and only car to survive until the cessation of hostilities."—Extract from letter received by Ford Motor Company from a British Soldier, in Africa.

Over shell-torn roads, through water soaked fields, second only to the tanks in its power to climb debris and crater holes, the Ford car made a world famous record in the fighting area of the great war. In press despatches, in field reports, in letters, in rhyme and song the praises of the Ford were sounded.

In France - 700 cars out of 1,000 were Fords
In Italy - 850 cars out of 1,000 were Fords
In Egypt - 996 cars out of 1,000 were Fords
In Mesopotamia - 999 cars out of 1,000 were Fords

The Ford power plant that established this world-wide record in every theatre of the war remains the same. It will be in the Ford you buy.

Canadian Faces and Asian Faces.

Some who watched Saturday's march of the overseas troops fancied they detected the emergence of national types. Seeing large bodies of men from Australia, Canada, and New Zealand in the mass is a different thing from coming on equal numbers scattered in various places. It was the long succession of faces which seemed to imprint on the observer's brain a recognizable composite photograph, as it were, of the Australian, Canadian, and New Zealanders respectively.

Comparing impressions after the march, two men who cherished this fancy agreed on the Australian and Canadian types. The Australian, they told each other, was a fine fellow physically, and had a countenance which would look well on an old Roman coin; there being about him a suggestion of beaked nose and ancient imperialism. The Canadian, on the other hand, was more English in his traits, and but for a certain breadth of feature might make an excellent Cockney. As for the New Zealander, one of the two observers had carried away an impression of slighter and more agile make, with a richer coloring, both in face and eyes, than either the Australian or the Canadian. The second man denied that New Zealand had evolved a type; but, as he happened to be a New Zealander himself, it might be argued that his perception was obscured by familiarity.

Prof. Keith, the eminent anthropologist, who has recently been giving us such interesting lessons from the human skull, was asked whether this empirical theory of types was soundly based. Though sympathetic, he was not reassuring, being inclined to think that if Englishmen and their overseas brethren were mingled in equal proportions it would be difficult, if not impossible, to distinguish between them. Climatic conditions produced superficial differences. The New Zealander's color, for example, might be ascribed to the atmospheric surroundings of his life at home; to the same causes, indeed, which impart the tinge to the Englishman's cheek, and to which the English girl owes her complexion.

But science is so far from being dogmatic on the question that it regrets the opportunity afforded by the massed presence of so many members of the British family in England has been lost owing to the immediate necessities of war. Instructive data might have been obtained if authority had not been compelled to fix its attention on more urgent matters. Even now there remains a chance of securing details of the kind to which science can pay attention before the great battalions are broken up for ever.

OUR COFFEE.

We Drink It But Are Not Authorities on Flavor.

In part the high price of coffee is attributed to a frost in parts of Brazil, but various causes have contributed. Puerto Rico, for example, which never is touched by frost, had last year a small crop, and the price of coffee in the island has increased 100 per cent. This has been ascribed sometimes to prohibition, but it is doubtful whether Puerto Rico could drink much more coffee than it was drinking before prohibition went into effect; its consumption of alcohol was extremely moderate and its consumption of coffee large, as is apt to be the case in the tropics. It is noteworthy in this country that many of the plans for a substitute for the saloon call for the provision of coffee as a substitute for alcoholic drinks. In the cafes of Europe the two go side by side, on an equal footing; at the same table one person may be drinking coffee and another beer. It might almost be said that European drink wine or beer with their meals and take their coffee in public, while Canadians drink coffee with their meals and take their alcohol in secret. This materially affects the position of coffee as a substitute.

If the coffee house is to be restored to the position it once had, considerable changes will need to be made in national habits and tastes. Used in moderation coffee is a relatively harmless stimulant, but it cannot be consumed so freely as beer, and most coffee drinkers take already quite as much as is good for them. To make coffee available as a social substitute for alcohol, therefore, the Canadian public would need to cut down its home drinking, so that the proposed establishment of coffee houses might not involve so great an increase in national consumption as has been predicted.

It is perhaps a more serious difficulty that the Canadian public, despite its enormous consumption of it, has not an educated taste in coffee. The market in Canada for the higher grades is relatively small, and there has been little appreciation for the excellent and full-flavored product. To the average Canadian coffee is a pale decoction used to wash down griddle-cakes, crullers and pie; it would never occur to him to take it as a separate luxury, nor as served would it be a luxury. Premier Clemenceau is said to have abandoned America because the people of the United States had no general ideas and no good coffee. It is to be feared he would like our coffee no better.

If the reformers can bring coffee up to the standard of countries where it is sipped as a delectable luxury, and can persuade people to like it, they will have accomplished a great deal, but neither undertaking is very easy. To be good, coffee must be made with great pains, and quite freshly; the arom quickly goes and staleness is fatal. Our long-established negligence in such matters will not be easily overcome. To be an interesting beverage, too, coffee needs an extra roast which at first most Canadians do not like. When they learn to relish it they begin to see how in Turkey and other countries coffee may be an end in itself and not a mere accompaniment to doughnuts, but many an enterprising reformer has come to grief in trying to educate the Canadian palate to the standard of New Orleans and of Latin Europe. It remains to be seen whether the numerous projects for serving superior coffee as a substitute for alcohol will fare better, but at all events the experiments will be of interest.

Preserving Chilkat.

The phonograph has been requisitioned to preserve the tribal language and folk songs of the Chilkat Indians of Alaska. Louis Shotridge, a member of that tribe, has recently returned to the United States after an absence of four years in Alaska, in the interests of the University Museum at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. He has devoted this time to studying the language, traditions and customs of his people, as well as to collecting their folk songs. Shotridge is the first Indian sent on such an enterprise. He has brought back many phonograph records of the Chilkat folk songs and ceremonial chants. Some of these will be transcribed into musical scores. The Chilkats are rapidly taking on the ways of civilization, and but for the work of Shotridge, their native folk songs might have completely disappeared in time. The Chilkats are fortunate people. What would many give to hear a phonographic record of English as spoken in the days of Chaucer, or the French of Moliere's time.

Has Done Good Work Ontario Temperance Act A Great Benefit to Province

THE Ontario Temperance Act has reduced crime by over one-third and drunkenness in public has practically disappeared.

Alcoholic insanity has disappeared.

Gold cures and alcoholic institutes for treating alcoholism have been closed for lack of patients.

Ontario has been saved an annual drink bill of $36,000,000, enough to pay our share of interest on the War Debt.

Many victims of alcohol three years ago, thank God to-day for the Ontario Temperance Act.

To repeal the Ontario Temperance Act would be a calamity. The amendments would make it practically worthless. To every question on the Referendum vote NO.

2.51% BEER—the Beer of the Ballot— is not Intoxicating

A determination as to whether or not a particular beer is intoxicating can be reached only by a proper understanding and analysis of the manner in which the alcohol in such beer affects the human organism.

Beer containing 2.51% alcohol by weight has been proven non-intoxicating by actual experiments, scientific tests, thorough research.

Fourteen specially qualified experts, testifying before the United States Circuit Courts of Appeals, were unanimous in agreeing that beer containing even as high as 2.75% alcohol by weight (or .24% stronger than the beer of the Referendum Ballot) was non-intoxicating.

These experts were Professors of Chemistry, Toxicology, Therapeutics, Nerve Specialists, Physical Training Instructors, Medical Doctors and specialists in charge of city departments where alcoholics were cared for. Experiments were conducted upon twenty-four men chosen from various walks of life—medical students, laborers, mechanics, business executives, clerks in banks and brokers' offices, artists, writers and professional men.

The experiments proved conclusively that beer of 2.75% alcoholic content strength could not possibly be intoxicating—not the slightest signs of intoxication were shown by any of the subjects.

In view of the sworn statements of these experts, based upon the results of their experiments, that beer containing 2.75% alcohol by weight is non-intoxicating, it must follow that 2.51% beer, the Beer of the Ballot, is non-intoxicating.

It is the strong conviction of the Citizens' Liberty League that—as no harmful results can possibly come from drinking 2.51% beer—then there is no fair or just reason why the general sale of beer of this quality should not be permitted.

Unite with the Citizens' Liberty League in its earnest, sincere endeavor to obtain moderate Temperance Legislation.

The Navy League of Canada Its Vital Work for Canada

THE Navy League of Canada fosters the splendid spirit that made the British the greatest of maritime nations. It organizes loyal Canadians so that practical work may be accomplished for the development of Canada's direct interests at sea.

The human side of Canada's Mercantile Marine is the League's especial interest—training Canadian boys to become the sturdy type of British manhood that won its laurels again and again in the great war—relieving distress among victims of the submarine warfare—and giving the sailor ashore an alternative place for rest and recreation to the places of doubtful entertainment that abound in port.

Why the $500,000 is needed

On Nelson Day, October 21st, starts a 3-day campaign throughout the Dominion to raise $500,000 necessary to finance the coming year's work of the Navy League of Canada. Help the work by giving liberally. As a nation whose expanding trade will depend on exports, we must educate our boys to the highest type of seamanship so that they will be equipped to man our ships to carry our exports to foreign markets.

You will do your part in this work by contributing liberally to the support of the Boy's Navy Brigades, the organizations by which the Navy League trains boys for our merchant marine.

Every dollar subscribed will be used to further the work of the Navy League in Canada—the work in which you are personally interested as a patriotic citizen. Help by giving.

Captured German Aero- plane to Fly at Nor- wood Fair

Come to East Peterborough's Big Exhibition at Norwood on Oct. 14th and 15th. The Directors have left nothing undone to make this day by far the biggest and best exhibition they have ever held. In speeding events they have more than doubled their prize money and expect a large number of first-class horses. A large exhibit of War Trophies has been secured from the Dominion Government.

Arrangements have been made for an exhibit of work done by disabled soldiers. This is an exceptionally fine exhibit and should not be missed.

For farmers a splendid exhibit has been secured from the Experimental farm at Ottawa. Also special egg exhibit from the Experimental farm. Captains Dallin, V. C. & Salter, Legion of Honour and Croix de Guerre, selected by Col. Barter for the Toronto Exhibition will put on a thrilling exhibition of Aerobatic Stunts in one of the famous Fokker Planes captured from the Germans and loaned especially for this occasion by the Dominion Government. The exhibition will consist of trench-staffing, looping, climbing, turns, nose-dives etc. No one should miss this opportunity of seeing these world famous Aviators. Mark the dates and come. General admission 25 cents.

The following reply was received from Mrs. Sinclair in reply to a letter of condolence from Eldorado L. O. L. No. 517 Eldorado.

Gentlemen:—

I received your letter and enclosure. Words fail me to express my gratitude. Thanks to you for your tribute to my dear husband.

As we go on our sad and lonely way your letter will be one of our looked on you as very dear friends.

He had the L. O. L. cause very near his heart and it is my prayer that the cause will spread from shore to shore, of this beautiful Canada.

A cause that looks after the widows and orphans He will surely prosper.

We again ask you to accept our grateful thanks.

Apple Blossoms and Sheen

It is not, of course, only apple blossom. Apple blossom is, indeed, the last to appear, but apple blossom, at Sheen, always seems to be the crowning mercy. Many days before its pink and white spreads itself in dainty riot over the orchards, which still, in spite of the builder, crowd up, in places, to the high road, the plum blossom and the pear blossom seem to have done the same. To the traveller from the north, or indeed from almost any part of England, there is always something rich and prodigal in the growth of things in the Thames valley. Here, in the little thickets of Richmond Park, the Wilderness of Hampton Court, or by the hidden paths of Kew, one finds always the first signs of spring, whilst the uplands of Buckinghamshire, or even Surrey Hills, are still "waiting" in their soft gray winter mists.

And so the Thames valley seems to keep ahead all the time until high summer wraps the whole countryside, far and near, in one bright garb of uniformity. One notices it as soon, almost, as Clapham Junction has been left behind. The trees still standing in sad neglected back gardens are clearly determined to keep up the reputation of the valley and burst out into a positively amazing green against the grayness of all around. As to Putney, a little farther on, it has never given way to London. Trees are everywhere, gardens everywhere, creeper everywhere, and though, in winter time, the town seems to gain the victory, with each returning spring, Putney puts on its country dress. And then, of course, after Putney, the green has it all its own way, and, about now, the blossom. Around the great curve of the river, circling Richmond Park, one sees, as one looks out of the train window, blossom everywhere, now in great masses where an orchard has been left intact, and now in splashes. And it is a single tree at the corner of some old garden that gladdens the eye as it enjoys its short spell of special glory. It is so more or less all the way round the loop, from Barnes to Wimbledon, but, somehow or another, the blossom at Sheen seems to stand out as specially worthy of note.

Now, as everybody knows, who knows anything about these parts, Sheen is the old name for Richmond. Many kings and queens of England had sojourned at their place of Sheen before "Henry VII, Earl of Richmond," changed the name to the Palace of Richmond. The eastern portion of the old town, however, did not conform itself to the change. It had long been known as East Sheen, and so it elected to remain, and so it has remained to this day. When it began to specialize in orchards it is hard to say, but one may still find them there, every year, it is true, a little more restricted, as the new roads and houses spread themselves in and out amongst them but still as radiant as ever. The traveller may leave the train at East Sheen, and, if he knows where to go, he may still catch wonderful glimpses of a sea of white and pink, just as it was a decade or more ago. He may still find the lily of the valley growing in long rows between the trees, "for Covent Garden Market," and may still look over the fence by the roadside, and see the ground far and near thickly covered with fallen petals.

O, Vale of bliss! O, softly swelling hills!

On which the Power of Cultivation lies.

A Solomon Islands Question.

In the British Solomon Islands the war has brought about new conditions that will make this part of the world much more livable than it has been. Before the war the British Solomon Islands, "neighbored" each other in a way that was anything but satisfactory to the white residents, or natives either, on the British side of the boundary. Two of the islands are separated only by a narrow strait, so shall we call it low water it is almost possible to go from island to island on foot. Had the government of the islands been similar, this would have made little difference, but Germany was ruling on her side of the water in a way that put a premium on emigration by natives, and the emigrants who crossed over were in no state of mind towards white rulers in general to make them welcome additions to the population of the British island. Troupes of savages, black of skin and grotesquely daubed with white pigments, were constantly crossing the narrow strait, and, as a consequence, there was always trouble brewing between the British and German authorities. British administration of the German island has calmed the native discontent, and the case with which the strait can be crossed no longer disturbs the peace of mind of the next door neighbor.

Horseshoeing.

Horseshoeing is a very ancient practice, and William the Conqueror introduced horseshoes into England. Stirrups were, however, unknown to the ancients, who had posts erected on their roads to enable horsemen to mount.

Blue Diamonds.

Blue diamonds, though unusually beautiful stones, are considered very unlucky. So much so that in the Orient they are known significantly as "diamonds of death."

Not Many People have

Money to Burn

these days and that is what you are doing, BURNING MONEY when you start a coal fire this early in the season. Buy an oil heater and save your coal for the winter, you will be surprised how quickly one of these heaters will drive the chills from the room, they can be placed in any room in the house. Our Oil Stove is a dandy heater for this damp and cold weather. Let us send you one to-day.

Oil Heaters

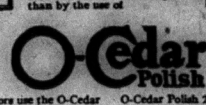

HAVE you an oil heater? One that you can move about the house, so that the room you are sitting in may be cozy warm even though the outside temperature is at zero? The kind we sell gives you all these conveniences.

DUST—

AND THE HOUSEWIFE WOMEN are constantly at war with dirt and dust. And the dust nuisance is at its worst in winter, with furnaces going, the coal dust, as well as ordinary dust. We know of no better means of combating dust than by the use of

Electric Heaters

THE little electric heater here illustrated is a wonder for burning out heat. It will not heat a room all by itself—but no adjustment to furnace heat. It helps slightly to keep you comfortable on cold days.

G. W. V. A.

The regular meeting of the G. W.
V. A. was held in the club rooms on Tuesday evening.

A number of accounts were passed and ordered paid.

The gross receipts from the exhibition and Tag Day on Fair Day were $127.50. The larger part of this was from the exhibition of war trophies. The tag day results being a disappointment.

Last Friday being the close of the Centre Teacher's Association Convention an impromptu dance to which the teachers were invited was given. About sixty were present and all spent a very enjoyable evening. The boys present contributed a share of the expenses to the G. W.

The Association investigated a complaint that Mrs. Brady had not received the back pay of her son, who was killed overseas. The secretary received a reply that the money would be forwarded at once.

A committee was formed to interview Mr. T. H. Thompson on his

Robert Cook by Acclamation

Never in the history of politics has there been such a break up in the old political parties. There are in the Legislature 111 seats for which nearly 300 candidates have been nominated. In nearly every constituency there is a three-cornered contest.

In the whole of the province there have been but four acclamations, out of these being Mr. Robt. J. Cook of North Hastings. While North Hastings has ever been Conservative it is seldom that a candidate is elected by acclamation, there generally being a fight in either the Conse-rative Convention or at the polls.
Mr. Cook's past record has apparently satisfied the electors. He has been instrumental in securing large grants for roads and schools in the constituency.

Wedding Bells

A very pleasant and interesting event took place at Ivanhoe on Wednesday evening Sept. 24th at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Reid, when the latter's sister Miss Earla J.
Post, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Post, of Fuller, became the bride of Ernest Roy Moore, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Moore, of Rimington. The ceremony was performed by Rev. A. Frederick, Pastor of Ivanhoe Methodist Church.

A beautiful arch of lattice work white lace and pink natural flowers complete with a large wedding bell was arranged across one corner of the large drawing room and formed a fitting back ground for the nuptial party. While Miss Margaret Post, cousin of the bride, played the wedding march, the bridal party took their places preceded by three little flower girls with lovely baskets of asters and smilax. Miss Helena McCoy and Miss Kate Smith were charmingly dressed in white crepe de chene trimmed with applique edgings and Miss Edna Green, of Fuller looked very dainty in white silk trimmed with georgette crepe and ribbon, all three girls wore a tiny gold locket and chain the gift of the groom.

The bride wore a beautiful gown of white silk with crepe de chene and baby Irish lace trimmings and the veil in Juliet cap style with natural flowers for a wreath was very becoming. She carried a lovely bouquet of fern and roses and her only ornament was a gold Lavalier set with pearls with an emerald drop, the gift of the groom.

After the signing of the register
the guests numbered over ninety remained to the large dining hall which was beautifully decorated with greenery and flowers. The splendid repast provided reflected great credit on the host and hostess.

The remainder of the evening was spent in a social way and about midnight the wedding party motored to Belleville enroute for a post nuptial trip by auto to Peterboro and other places. The brides travelling gown was a Burgundy serge tailored suit with hat to match.

Upon their return they will reside on the groom's farm at Rimington.
The array of wedding gifts amply testified to the popularity of the bride and groom, as they were beautiful, costly and numerous.

Guests were present from Toronto Belleville, Madoc, Rimington, Ma-doc and Campbellford.

Mr. and Mrs. Moore will be at home to their friends after Nov. 1st.

RECEPTION AT RIMINGTON

On the evening of Sept. 25th a pleasant event took place at the home of Mr. J. C. Moore, it being the reception for his son Ernest and his bride (nee Earla Post). The guests numbering fifty or more represented the married folks of the neighborhood and the bride's parents, brothers and sisters.
About 9.30 o'clock all sat down to a very dainty and sumptuous tea for the tables truly justified their beautiful appearance and the guests did full justice to the good things provided.

Rev. and Mrs. Hie, from Eldorado, were present and helped considerably to make the evening pass pleasantly for all concerned.

The gifts were beautiful and again proved the esteem in which the young people were held.

A small charivari party arrived and with bells and guns made their presence known. They came they said to put on the finishing touch as it would have been incomplete without them.

To the Voter

DO YOU KNOW— that the beer sold in Ontario previous to prohibition ranged up to over 7% alcoholic content by weight measure, whilst the "Beer of the Ballot"—the beer for which you are asked to vote October 20th—has a strength of but 2.51%?

DO YOU KNOW— that such well-known beers manufactured in the United States as Blue Ribbon, Budweiser and Schiltz—always spoken of as "very light non-intoxicating beers"—ranged up to 4.19%—sixty per cent. stronger than the "Beer of the Ballot"—the beer for which you are asked to vote October 20th?

DO YOU KNOW— that in Maine, where prohibition has been in force over sixty years, the courts have held that beer of 3% alcoholic strength, was non-intoxicating—and any beer of under 3% strength was permitted to be sold as freely as ginger ale?

DO YOU KNOW— that in Sweden, Norway and Denmark—as a result of the findings of Government commissions appointed to determine what was an intoxicating liquor—beer of practically the same strength as asked for in the coming Referendum is regarded as non-intoxicating and is sold everywhere, by anybody, without license, and without paying a Government tax?

A BATTLE WITH ICE.

How the "Lake Ontario" Reached the Ocean.

The Lake Ontario, built on the Great Lakes, began her career by forcing her way to the ocean through ice in the St. Lawrence river so thick that Canadian ice-crushers gave it up. Having got her hand in, so to speak, she became one of the mine-carriers operated by the naval overseas service. In this work she dodged torpedoes and floating mines, was followed one thousand miles by a German submarine, drove off another sub with five well-placed shots, was used as live bait in a convoy to trap a submarine, weathered an eighty-five-mile gale while steaming four miles an hour astern with her engines turning 100 revolutions per minute on the "go ahead," and through it all never had an accident.

These are some of the high lights in her very interesting story, which is told by her commanding officer, Lieut.-Col. E. Gordon Rattray, in the Chicago Tribune. According to Commander Rattray:

The Lake Ontario was launched November 20, 1917. Five days later we left Manitowoc for New York City.

While in Montreal, on the way to New York, we received orders to proceed with seven other ships through the ice to Quebec before we were all frozen in, as was the last fleet out. It was then from seven to ten degrees below zero, with the rivers and small lakes covered with ice.

The huge Government ice-crusher, Lady Gray, met us to break a way through the ice as far as Quebec, where we would receive the assistance of another large Canadian Government ice-crusher, Bell View. The two were then to break the fleet out through to clear water. The Lake Ontario was last to leave Two Rivers and first to arrive at Quebec, smashing her way through seven feet of ice at Victoria bridge. The fleet stopped all night at Quebec. The next morning at 7 o'clock we started out through very heavy ice. After proceeding for five hours through ice that measured up to twenty feet, the Canadian ice-crushers turned back with six of the other ships.

The Lake Ontario continued bucking the ice, with the War Fox following. This is where the battle commenced. All the buoys were gone for 157 miles in this river, carried out by the heavy ice, in tides that ran as high as seven knots per hour in places.

This battle with ice lasted three days and nights with a temperature of 15 degrees below zero. At times ice started to come over the top of the ship and her sides and frames were springing in and out with the pressure and grinding of ice, which had reached a thickness of thirty feet. By the twisting of the tides and by filling the cargo hold aft with water and laying her down on her side, we managed to reach open water after three days and nights of continuous work. The ice extended for 510 miles, from Montreal out into the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The balance of the fleet was frozen in at Quebec, the steamship Angeline going down. We lost track of the War Fox off Father's Point in the ice that night. She kept coming, however, as she was a game little "laker." We both dropped anchor at Port Hawkesbury, out of Canada, Nova Scotia. We started out together again, but the Lake Ontario, being faster, we arrived in New York first.

After being fitted for naval operations as a mine-carrier with depth charges, and guns mounted fore and aft, we made the trip from New York to Norfolk, Virginia, thence to Tampico, Mexico. We fueled up two warships while there and proceeded back to Key West, where we finished discharging our cargo at the naval station.

While in convoy bound from Norfolk to Lochlash, Scotland, we passed over a nest of eight mines which had been laid for us the night previous by a submarine. These were picked up the next day by British trawlers and mine-sweepers. After leaving Kyle we returned to Glasgow for fuel and provisions. On our way from Glasgow to Hampton Roads we passed over the United States steamship Lake Moor's wreck.

After receiving numerous wireless messages from ships being attacked by German submarines, we arrived in Hampton Roads none the worse for our trip. It was always every ship for herself after passing the north coast of Ireland, where submarines and mines were very plentiful indeed. To find our way back to our home port, we changed our course as high as three thousand times.

Indians as Farmers.

It is expected that Indians in the three Western Provinces will have 2,000 acres of grain to harvest this year. With a favorable season the Indians will garner over two and a half million bushels of coarse grain, to say nothing of the feed and hay which will be harvested for the live stock. During the past three years they have made phenomenal strides of advancement in agriculture generally, and their live stock, having come through the winter in prime condition, will show considerable increase in numbers.

Never Too Late.

The wedding took place on May 30, in the presence of members of the Victory Hall congregation on University street, Montreal, of John Trudeau, 31 years of age, who is connected with the firm of Goodwin's Limited. The bride was Mrs. Ellen A. Purvis, of Simcoe County, aged 31 years. The marriage was performed by Pastor D. K. Byrne. At the close of the ceremony the newly married couple left for Quebec for their honeymoon.

Everyone Who Bought Canada's Victory Bonds Made Money

EVERY one of the million and a half subscribers to Canada's Victory Bonds knows that he can sell them today for more than he paid for them.

Every one who bought Canada's Victory Bonds has received 5½ per cent. interest per annum—paid twice a year.

Over half a million Canadians who bought Canada's Victory Bonds on the instalment plan saved money that they would not otherwise have saved.

The guarantee back of Canada's Victory Bonds is the same as the guarantee back of a One Dollar or a Two Dollar bill. There is this difference, however, that you get interest on the Victory Bonds and you don't on the One or Two Dollar bill.

Canada's Victory Bonds will always be accepted as security for a loan.

Banks are ready to loan money on Canada's Victory Bonds.

Canada's Victory Bonds may be turned into cash at any time.

There is no other way in which you can invest your money with such absolute security—paying such a good rate of interest.

Canada will soon give her citizens an opportunity to buy Victory Bonds 1919. It will probably be the last chance to buy Canada's Victory Bonds on such favorable terms.

Prepare to buy as many Victory Bonds this time as you now wish you had been able to buy the last time

GREAT INDUSTRY LOST

DIAMOND DEALERS HAVE NOW FORSAKEN ANTWERP.

Before War This Belgian City Transacted More Diamond Business Than All the Rest of Europe Put Together. But Coming of Germans Created Situation That Forced Members of "Diamond" Club to Flee to Holland.

THE Boche put a very definite stop to the diamond trade of Antwerp—just to show how thorough he was. Before the war the great Belgian seaport was the principal seat of the world's diamond industry—a distinction formerly held by the rival Dutch port of Amsterdam. It would be a long story to tell how and why the trade shifted its centre—the fact remains that prior to August 1, 1914, more diamond business was transacted at Antwerp than in the rest of Europe taken together.

And now? Listen to the account the Rotterdam correspondent of the Berliner Neueste Nachrichten gives of the passing of Antwerp's diamond story.

"In the year 1914 there were about 200 diamond cutting shops in Antwerp, employing about 16,000 cutters and 3,000 cementers, altogether about 20,000 highly skilled workmen, who earned over 100,000,000 francs ($20,000,000) a year. Besides, there were between 3,000 and 4,000 manufacturers, merchants and brokers; what these men earned it is impossible to tell; it is certain that they dressed very flashily and spent lots of money. If it is considered further that these 23,000 diamond men had families averaging three to four members, it will be found that the living of over 100,000 people depended directly on the diamond trade. Add to this the large number of hotel and safe owners who made huge sums on the diamond trade. The fact is these men acted as private bankers to the cutters, who lived almost exclusively in hotels and boarding houses and paid their accounts at long intervals. Finally, there were the hosts of tradesmen and retailers who supplied the 'diamond people' with provisions, clothes and furniture. The 'Diamond Club' of Antwerp, where the yearly business ran into millions of francs, had a membership of 12,000, all of them merchants, brokers or manufacturers.

"This club was situated in a gorgeous building near the railroad terminal, 300 yards from the exchange hall over 300 feet in length. During the war this hall was destroyed, but last year it was restored. Here diamonds were bought and sold, offers whispered and shouted in all European languages; here the courts of arbitration and conciliation had their chambers, institutions which rescued club members from the claws of lawyers. The courts proved a great success; since their establishment nobody ever heard of a lawsuit in the diamond trade. The cutting industry was almost exclusively in Belgian hands; on the contrary, buying and selling were altogether controlled by foreigners—more than half of the merchants and brokers were Turks or Poles.

"What could such a Polish Jew do in 1914 when the Germans entered Belgium? If he hailed from Warsaw he was a Russian subject and an enemy alien; if he came from Cracow he was an Austrian and liable to military service at home. And yet those from Warsaw and those from Cracow were exactly the same people. When the Germans entered and the Belgian Jews made their entry, these Jews took to their heels and scattered in all directions of the compass.

"The French papers called them Boches, semi-Boches, triple-Boches, archi-Boches and so on. This was rather ill-considered. The newspapers did not figure out what the exodus of the Poles and Turks meant for Antwerp. The industry is dead since the merchants are gone. Out of the 16,000 cutting benches only about 1,000 are still operated; 15,000 highly skilled workmen starve. The Diamond Club presents a sorry sight. If one looks through the huge crystal windows into the exchange hall, one observes a small group of men, crouching around a fireplace as if lost; one hears nothing but the clink of the glasses and the slapping of cards. I accosted a man who was just about to leave. 'What are these people waiting for?' The man cast a shy glance at me and whispered: 'The Poles.' Where are the Polish Finkelsteins and Silberfelds and Fischers, the Russian Tolkowskis and the Turkish Saltis, Sivas and Mirahis, whose very names suggest the Orient, with its camels and rugs, harem and candle lights? Where are these men whose gold was so thickly sown into the soil of Antwerp that every inhabitant had his share of the harvest? Most of them are in Scheveningen, across the Dutch border, where they already have founded two clubs, one of them as a permanent institution—an ominous fact for Antwerp, for Antwerp needs the Jews more than the Jews need Antwerp.

An Offering From Alsace.

It is more than welcome to know that one of the first thoughts, last November, of the 'lost province' of Alsace, now happily restored to France, was for the provinces of the north, whose bitter sufferings had helped to right the wrongs of 1871. As soon as the French troops entered Strasbourg a committee was formed to collect offerings as a token of gratitude for liberation from the German yoke. This fund has just been closed, and the total amount collected, about 1,000,000 francs, presented by the committee to the President of the Republic for the relief of the 'martyred provinces.' Alsace has made a good beginning.

Canadian Educational Tours.

Much interest attaches to the scheme under which members of the Overseas Military Forces are to make tours in the Old Country for instruction in agriculture, fishing and other industries in which they may be able to give hints for developments in the Dominion. Thus a party of selected men are to attend the Royal Agricultural Show at Cardiff, and other agricultural events. The Board of Fisheries is also providing for visits to various establishments where equipment and modern methods of treating can be studied. It may be hoped also that the great northern centres of manufacture will be seen, and that some of these factories will be opened up to selected parties. It is not merely a question of enlarging existing trade relations between the two countries, nor of giving fraternal hints to stimulate domestic trade in each country, but these movements may quicken ideas that may lead to some fresh ventures that will be of advantage to us on both sides. The magnificent fighting services of the Canadians, and their good comradeship on the battlefield, has done very much to bring the Old Country and the people of the Dominion nearer to each other, and it is highly desirable that this should be followed up by the strengthening of ties while the soldiers are still in the Old Land.

How to say "No!"

Mark Your Ballot with an X after Each Question under the word "No"

1	Are you in favour of the repeal of the Ontario Temperance Act?	YES	NO
2	Are you in favour of the sale of light beer containing not more than two and fifty-one one-hundredths per cent alcohol weight measure through Government agencies and amendments to the Ontario Temperance Act to permit such sale?	YES	NO
3	Are you in favour of the sale of light beer containing not more than two and fifty-one one-hundredths per cent alcohol weight measure in standard hotels in local municipalities that by a majority vote favour such sale and amendments to the Ontario Temperance Act to permit such sale?	YES	NO
4	Are you in favour of the sale of spirituous and malt liquors through Government agencies and amendments to the Ontario Temperance Act to permit such sale?	YES	NO

Above is an exact reproduction of the Referendum ballot, showing the correct way to Vote in order to sustain the Ontario Temperance Act as it stands.

Everybody should study the four questions and realize exactly what they mean. Do not be misled by the insidious demand for "light" beer.

The beer of the ballot is 118% stronger than the Ontario Temperance Act now allows, and over five times as strong as the limit allowed for beer defined as non-intoxicating in Great Britain and the United States.

Answer Each Question

1. Unless you vote on every question your ballot is spoiled.
2. You must mark your answer to each question with an "X" only. Anything else would spoil your ballot.
3. Unless a majority vote "No" on question 1 the bars will be restored and the sale of all kinds of intoxicants permitted.
4. Unless a majority vote "No" on questions 2, 3 and 4 the Ontario Temperance Act will become almost worthless.
5. The only SAFE course is to mark your ballot as shown above.

"No!"—Four Times—"No!"

No repeal; No government beer shops; No beer saloons; No government whiskey shops.—Four X's, each under the word "No."

Let— Ontario's Golden Era Continue PROGRESS—PERFORMANCE—PROMISE

IF we have given worthy service during the trying time of war, may we not be relied upon to serve the nation faithfully and well in hastening the time of still greater prosperity and happiness? As we have begun, so we will continue; fearless in the discharge of duty and ever alert in the service to our people. Conscious of our shortcomings, and grateful for the opportunities we have had to serve our Province, we submit our record with confidence to the electors for their consideration and approval, and ask from a united people a mandate to carry on the Government of this Province.

WAR WORK Ontario gave in men 22,895; in contributions $34,332,188; to Victory loans $340,465,350. Ontario provided 50 per cent of Canada's war effort. The Ontario Government spent in war work over $10,000,000; the most efficient military hospital in Europe; furnished club houses for the soldiers in London and Paris; made gifts of food and guns to the Mother Country; made large grants to the British Red Cross, Belgium, Serbian relief and other worthy patriotic objects. Ontario's war effort has made the name of Ontario resound in every corner of the world.	EDUCATION Ontario's educational system is designed to provide the most efficient training possible for the boys and girls who are to become the future citizens of the state. Under the leadership of the Minister of Education no expenditure has been denied to accomplish this purpose. Generous grants have been made for agricultural, technical and vocational training; returned soldiers are encouraged to enter the teaching profession; teachers' salaries have been raised and a superannuation scheme inaugurated. This year nearly $4,000,000 will be spent on education in Ontario.	HYDRO-ELECTRIC Hydro is to-day the most extensive public-ownership enterprise of its kind in the world. Since its inception Hydro-Electric has saved to the consumers of electric power in Ontario over fifty millions of dollars. Hydro discharges annually 5,000,000 tons of coal. Hydro develops and distributes power to over 230 municipalities, 175,000 domestic consumers and 6,000 customers for power. The Queenston-Chippewa scheme will provide an economical development of 400,000 horse power, and the prospective ultimate development in the whole Province is over 1,000,000 horse power.	AGRICULTURE The agricultural industry in Ontario is in a prosperous and thriving condition. Appropriations in 1904 amounted to $7,000,000; in 1913, $1,675,000. Last year the value of the farm products of Ontario was $350,000,000, and the value of the combined farm assets was one and a half billion dollars. Within the last three years ten thousand farm mortgages have been paid off. Encouragement has been extended to every branch of the industry, education has been fostered, social conditions have been improved. Agriculture has received the "warmest and unremitting attention" of the Government.
FINANCE In 1904 the income of Ontario was $4,464,000; in 1913 it was $11,188,302; in 1918 it was $19,270,125. This has been accomplished without resorting to direct taxation—apart from the war tax, which has been repealed. Out of this revenue the Government has returned to the people in larger grants, $1,807,000 for Education; $1,676,235 for Agriculture. The public services have been enlarged and ample grants have enabled important public duties to be undertaken.	HIGHWAYS Good roads add wealth and comfort to rural life. The highway improvement programme of the Ontario Government is applied to both urban and rural districts. A complete system of roads, including provincial roads, provincial county roads, county roads and townships roads, has been constructed. The entire motor license revenue, with a large amount added, will be spent annually on this work.	LABOR Ontario's industrial leadership in Canada has been maintained by broad and effective labor laws. Under the Workmen's Compensation Act $10,000,000 has been paid out in awards. Special safeguards have been provided for female and child labor. A minimum wage in Ontario is assured, and a direct representative of Labor will sit on the Cabinet. Free employment agencies have been established, and technical education has been encouraged.	HEALTH Ontario's public health service is not excelled on the continent. Public health education, child welfare, sanitary engineering, agriculture, and the free distribution of antitoxins and sera have conserved life and prevented epidemic. A scheme of pensions for mothers is to be established. The Provincial Board of Health supplied all the typhoid vaccine used by the Canadian troops in the war. This feature of the work has brought about a saving of over $100,000 a year to the people of the Province.

As a war measure the Ontario Temperance Act was so passed, suspending for the duration of the war the retail sale of liquor. The promise was given that as soon as the war was over the whole question of the character of the liquor legislation of Ontario would be submitted to the people by Referendum, and the will of the people would prevail. This promise is now being fulfilled.

PROMISE

Greatest possible assistance to Agriculture—Faithful enforcement of the Referendum—Support of Hydro-Electric; cheap light and power for the farmer—Convert railway branch lines into Hydro routes—Good roads in every part of Ontario—State pension fund for mothers—Direct representation of Labor in the Cabinet—A minimum wage—Housing accommodation—Legislation implementing the findings of the National Industrial Conference—Consideration to returned soldiers with Cabinet representation—Educational progress, technical and agricultural instruction—Improved transportation in Northern Ontario—Timber conservation—Encouragement in mining development—Enlargement of Ontario's free public health service.

Presentation

On the evening of October 3rd the friends and neighbors from Hart's met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ina McCarthy to spend a pleasant evening with them before they leave for their new home in Peterboro. During the evening they presented them with a beautiful chair and the following address was read:

Dear Mr. and Mrs. McCarthy:— It is with regret that we, your friends, have learned of your intended departure. Through the many years, you have lived among us, we have learned to esteem you as kind neighbours and good citizens.

From our Church at Hart's, you will long be missed, for you have ever been faithful and consistent members. For many years, even beyond the memory of many of us, your places were seldom vacant, and the example you both have set tends to point us upward toward the Great Example.

We wish you health and happiness and trust that you may have many good friends in your new home. May this chair remind you, at times, of the old friends and neighbours who wish to show their appreciation of you.

Signed on behalf of your friends, J. R. Trumppour, Pastor; J. I. Palmer; L. R. Kells.

Mr. McCarthy made a suitable reply followed by addresses by Rev. Trumppour and others. After partaking of lunch the guests departed to their homes.

Notice

The undersigned wishes through the columns of the Review to thank the people of the district for honouring the Agricultural Society with their presence on the Exhibition grounds on Wednesday last and especially those ladies who labored so diligently and with such judgement to have everything in their proper classes which was very gratifying to the Judges. The success of the fair is largely due to those ladies and our energetic secretary. The Sports Committee are to be complimented on all their arrangements which to my humble mind was all that could be desired. The thanks of the Association are also extended to those men who assisted under the able supervision of Mr. Dan Rodgers. He is an expert at erecting tents, and placing the tables. The decorating was tastefully performed.

On behalf of the Society I take this opportunity of asking that the same courteous treatment and help be extended to my successor in office. Again I thank the people of Madoc and surrounding country.

A. NICOLSON, President.

Malone

Well, Thanksgiving is over and I am sure everyone enjoyed themselves as it was such a delightful day.

By all accounts I believe it is soon hunting season. Mr. Wm. Carman captured three in about ten minutes one evening. But they don't all catch coons in corn patches. Mr. Dan McCremon came in contact with a bear.

Miss Devolin, Malone school teacher spent Thanksgiving at her home in Madoc.

Mr. Dan Tarrion, of Osadwa, spent Thanksgiving at his home here.

Several from here attended the Free Methodist Church at Beaver Creek on Sunday evening.

Miss Beatrice Miller spent Thanksgiving under the parental roof.

Miss Nellie Derry spent Thanksgiving with Miss Jennie Pawley, of Harold.

Miss Helen Wiley has left for an extended visit with friends in Toronto.

Owing to such favorable weather the Sunday School Rally was largely attended at Zion Methodist Church.

Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Nickle spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Bert Wiley.

I wonder where those young men of Malone visited on Sunday, especially the two that attended church in the morning.

Miss Gladys and Mr. Ernest Carman, of Malone, attended the funeral of the late Mrs. George Wiggins, of Cordova, in Marmora on Saturday last.

Miss Florence Highland, school teacher at Zion spent Thanksgiving at her home in Napanee.

Eldorado

Mrs. Henry Nickle, of Malone, was the guest of her sister Mrs. G. D. Gordon for her Thanksgiving dinner.

Mr. Sim Fox has sold his farm to Mr. George Hamilton of North Marmora.

Mr. Sim Fox has purchased Mr. E. Fox's house and will move in Spring Mr. Ed. Fox will move to Pictou.

Quite a number from Eldorado attended Madoc Fair.

We are glad to see Mr. Strebe and his young bride home again.

Th gathering at the Orange all, Eldorado, Friday night was very good for such a night.

Mr. Alex Gordon made a flying visit to Malone on Wednesday.

Mrs. Tommy Broadworth, of Malone was a weeks visitor at the home of her sister Mrs. G. D. Gordon.

Mr. and Mrs. G. D. Gordon, Alex and Mrs. Ed. Battman and son Gordon were the guests of Mrs. Maggie Corliss.

Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Morrison was the Sunday guest of Mr. and Mrs. Tony Broadworth.

Mrs. Teresa and Alice Lloyd, of Bannockburn, were guests of Mrs. G. D. Gordon one afternoon.

Bannockburn has a new butcher he calls on the Eldorado people too.

Mrs. Lester O'Hara took a nice trip to Belleville last Saturday.

The tale mine at Eldorado is doing grand work, hauling every day to the station.

Miss Gladys Warren was a caller at the tale mine.

Mr. Harry French has left the tale mine and gone for a holiday trip.

Mr. Ernie Wannamaker and Mr. Ed Wilson have the care of the tale mine truck.

Mr. Russel Fitzgerald is doing a good business in his new temperance house last owned by Mr. Harry Jones.

Mr. R. R. Hannagh is shipping cattle from Eldorado Station.

Eldorado is not dead yet just thinking.

McINTOSH BROS

Intolerance or Compromise?

A Challenge to Common Sense!

DON'T let anyone tell you that the issue on October 20th is "The Beer or the Boy"—"Is Alcohol a Poison or not"—"Economy or Extravagance"—any such an abstraction.

The plain situation is—three sections of the people of this Province are absolutely dissatisfied with the Ontario Temperance Act and want new legislation that will permit the sale of light beer and wine generally, and the sale of pure, spirituous liquors only through Government agencies.

These three sections of the population are—ninety per cent. of organized labor, by actual vote; a large number of returned soldier organizations, by actual vote; thousands of the rank and file of the electorate who have joined the Citizen's Liberty League.

The plain issue then is—Are you going to vote for the safe, sane, fair compromise that these men and women want; or, are you going to insist on the retention of the unsatisfactory Ontario Temperance Act—insist on the retention of legislation that is breeding and will continue to breed dissatisfaction and discontent among our workers, returned men and a large section of the citizens generally?

Which are YOU for—COMPROMISE and HARMONY, or INTOLERANCE and Widespread Resentment?

CAMEO KIRBY

As comes, in fact, Kirby was the sole member of the interested audience who appeared to appreciate the full humor of the situation.

"When is my funeral?" he asked, with a smile. "I don't want to miss that."

His composure somewhat recovered; but, still chuckling and occasionally going off into another spasm of laughter, the judge proceeded to explain the manner in which he had gained the interesting information.

"The afternoon steamer does not stop, sir, and I am obliged to row out in a boat to get my letters. The news was shouted to us from the deck as she moved away. All I could catch was the words, 'Colonel Moreau dead,' and I think they added, 'This morning.' The distance was too great for me to secure any further items from that interesting liar, sir."

And, still laughing, Pleydell clapped Kirby on the shoulder, while Mr. Bunce, drawing his first long breath, mutely thanked the Almighty that all guilelessness and innocence had not entirely deserted mankind when the serpent entered Eden.

But it was apparent that Mr. Randall and M. Veaudry owned more discernment and that their quick suspicions, previously aroused, had now become active, pregnant with danger. It so happened that they were now augmented by none other than the General, who would have died rather than wittingly betray his trust. During the judge's discourse the boy had joined the group, seeking out Kirby as his natural companion. Looking at the other's hand and again at his breast, the General suddenly exclaimed: "I know what all those things are that you wear. They're cameos."

"Cameos," exclaimed Aaron under his breath, his eyes returning to those of M. Veaudry.

Meanwhile Adele had been busily preparing for her last mute appeal to Kirby to remain. For the first time since her father's death she discarded mourning and in its place arrayed herself in a treasured evening gown of white satin purchased in Paris before the long shadow had descended upon seeking a blemish and finding it not. Indeed, her toilet finished, the result more than justified her elaborate and careful preparation. As a finishing touch she pinned in her collar the white camellia which Kirby had discarded, and, conscious that she had done her very best in this important detail of her maneuver, she repaired to the veranda, accompanied by Mme. Davezac and Miss Pleydell, suitably attired for the evening.

The moon had now risen, flooding the garden with its brilliant light and disclosing Mr. Randall and M. Veaudry standing a little apart from the others, their attitude eloquent of hostile suspicion. A pregnant silence had succeeded the General's exclamation, a silence broken at length by a tense whisper from Bunce.

"Come, Gene," he urged, catching the other's arm. "The boy has let it out. Look at that man's face," indicating Aaron Randall.

Kirby nodded imperceptibly while he calmly patted the General's head. "Gentlemen," he said, bowing to the others, "I regret I am taking my leave. I only wait to say goodbye to Miss Randall."

"Who is it speaks of leaving?" suddenly demanded Adele's clear voice, and, turning, they all saw the ladies watching them from the veranda. "Colonel Moreau," added the girl, coming down the steps and approaching Kirby, while Mme. Davezac and Ann Pleydell echoed her protests, "you can't think of leaving. Dinner is served, and your place at table is next to me. Will you give me your arm?" smiling up into his eyes.

The full significance of her change of attire, the delicate but overwhelming compliment paid by the white camellia and the message it mutely conveyed, the great honor shown him, the overpowering appeal which this new, wondrous, resplendent Adele made to his already captive senses, wiped out in a breath all Kirby's hitherto adamant resolution and fixity of purpose, obliterated all thoughts of the future or care for his present danger.

"Now get to those horses," implored Bunce, sensing that his partner was in peril of yielding dominion to this feminine appeal. "Get to the horses, Gene." "Hang the horses!" cried Kirby recklessly. "I'm going to dinner with a lady."

Throwing whip and hat on the garden seat, he bowed to Adele and offered his arm, while Larkin Bunce, inwardly raging at this new and sublime act of lunacy, turned helplessly to his sympathetic but invisible audience.

CHAPTER X.

DUE in a great measure to Kirby's and Adele's high spirits, which infected all but three members of the company, the dinner in honor of Colonel Moreau was an entire success and, in fact, could not have been surpassed had that unfortunate gentleman himself been present. Judge Pleydell, believing that he was assisting to entertain one who by championing the cause of the Randalls, while at the same time ridding the community of the notorious Cameo Kirby, had earned his last evening's esteem and gratitude, told his best stories in his happiest vein, and Mme. Davezac, together with Ann Pleydell, suffering under the same delusion, put forth every effort to charm, even going to the length of heartily applauding the judge's most venerable and moth-ravaged yarns.

No mean raconteur himself, Kirby ransacked his vast store of personal experience for interesting topics of conversation that would bear rehearsal in the present company, and even Bunce, finally and unwillingly drawn by some mysterious spell into the vortex of small talk, carefully selected, as befitted a "secretary," the least innocuous of his many escapades and ventured to confide it to the demure ear of his dinner partner, Miss Pleydell. This heroic action of the old river gambler—for he was desperately embarrassed at the honor shown him and thoroughly cognizant what must be the inevitable and tragic ending of his partner's reckless action—is sufficient testimony to the fact that the preoccupied manner of M. Veaudry, coupled with Mr. Randall's grave silence and studied courtesy toward Kirby, had no effect upon the spirits of the company, if, indeed, their demeanor was even noted by the majority.

Before entering the house the two gentlemen in question had come to an understanding regarding the status of their guest, concurring in the opinion that he was impersonating the gentleman in whose honor the dinner had been planned. But Aaron alone had found a sinister significance in the General's observation to the effect that Kirby wore a quantity of cameos, and, although he lacked authentic evidence upon which to erect his suspicions, while likewise granting that it was an amazing and unbelievable action for one to deliberately walk into the house of his enemies, he vaguely sensed that the pseudo Colonel Moreau was none other than the notorious Eugene Kirby.

Still, Aaron Randall was a strictly just and upright man, who was fully aware of the many crimes committed in the name of circumstantial evidence. Slow to pronounce judgment, he was quick to act when once assured that in no sense would justice be violated. Moreover, Adele, in whose integrity and force of character he had the firmest belief and for whom he had the highest regard and proof of whose acumen he had had ample testimony, roused for the imposture and even confessed complicity if not actual initiative in the same. In the absence of Tom Randall she was absolute mistress, with the right to act as she deemed fit, and had, moreover, exacted his word of honor that he would trust her until the arrival of her brother. Even had he been satisfied with the truth of his conjectures regarding Kirby's identity this promise to Adele would have pledged Aaron to secrecy, and M. Veaudry, being subsequently acquainted with the compact, likewise agreed that it could not be violated.

For the young couple this passive role was extremely difficult, and it was eloquent proof of his self-command and personal integrity, coupled with those refined instincts bestowed by gentle birth and breeding, that he considered Aaron's promise equally binding upon himself and, representing all promptings of jealousy, refrained from denouncing Kirby as an impostor. The successful suit of an honorable rival would have been difficult enough to recognize, but this encouragement of a stranger who at the best was a masquerader if not a character more sinister and of a nature was insatiable.

New cases of rapid rise in rank of soldier can compare with the record of Brig.-Gen. Alfred Cecil Critchley. When the war began he was 24 years old and a lieutenant in the Canadian army. In February, 1918, he had reached the brigadier's grade, and assumed command of the air and ground training school of the Royal Flying Corps.

In New York the other day he was asked how it had happened. His answer was laconic and without frills: "I started soldiering back in 1908. When the war broke out I was a lieutenant in Lord Strathcona's Horse. That is the name of the Canadian permanent force. We went over to England soon after the war started. The Canadian Division was held over there for a while in training camps. I was made captain in February, 1915. We were originally a cavalry regiment, but the army in France was so hard pressed for infantrymen, that we were transferred into that service. By December, 1915, I was promoted to the rank of major, and shortly afterward was made brigade staff captain. (In the British army a brigade staff captain is a rank higher than a regimental major.) Next came the grade of general staff officer of the third grade in a Canadian division, followed by the rank of brigade major."

"By August, 1916, I was general staff officer of the second grade. I was then asked by Gen. Byng, who was in command of the Canadian army, to organize an officers' training school for the Canadian corps. I went back to England for this purpose in November, 1916, with the rank of colonel. We started the school at Hoxhill, where I was made general staff officer of the first grade. I kept up constant liaison between England and France, continually crossing and recrossing the Channel to see how the officers trained at the school were coming on. The school proved a great success, and in February, 1918, I was assigned the command of the officer and cadet training school of the Royal Flying Corps with the rank of brigadier general."

"Active participation in the war was over for me when I left for England in 1917. Up to that time I had been stationed at the front. While I was in active service my father and two brothers came out to my regiment as junior officers. I was captain at the time, while my father, O. A. Critchley, now a major, was a lieutenant."

Gen. Critchley wears two wound stripes on his left arm, and one red the war in 1914; the four blue stripes the red stripe means that he was in the war in 1914; the four blue stripes indicate his four years' service. He was wounded in August, 1915, while fighting with the French at Messines Ridge, and later in 1916 in the Ypres salient. He received the Distinguished Service Order in 1916, and in 1918 was made a Companion of the Order of St. Michael and St. George.

When asked to tell what special feat of bravery had given him the two decorations he replied:

"Nothing; the same things that were done by thousands of other men. Usual thing in war. Nothing extraordinary about it."

ANCIENT COINS.

Money was in circulation in Asia and Europe in 750 B.C.
Coinage was in circulation in Asia and Europe as early as 750 B.C. But the ancients did not put dates on their coins, and so it is not always easy to fix the exact period of their issue.
They were, of course, not struck by machine, as is the case with modern coins. Nevertheless, some of them possess a high artistic merit.
Even nowadays people buy money. In ancient times, when a man's possessions were far less safe, the practice was much more common. Largely owing to it is the fact that such great numbers of early coins (mostly discovered by accident) exist to-day in collections.
There is, indeed, hardly an ancient coinage of which specimens are not extant. Many of them have been derived from the hoards of sacerdotal establishments.
The earliest known bronze coins of the Romans date back to 335 B.C. They issued silver coins less than a century later. But doubtless the gold and silver money of other countries was largely used by the ancient Romans, introduced among them through the aggressive commerce of Greek and Asiatic states.
There was no lack of the precious metals in those days. Dr. T. L. Comperette, numismatist of the Philadelphia Mint, says that in ancient times the supply of gold and silver was as great in proportion to the population using money coined of those metals as it is to-day.

St. Mark's Horses.

The four great horses that all tourists must remember on the porch of St. Mark's have been standing on earth in a Roman garden waiting to return to Venice, whence the war banished them; and their beauty seems to be enhanced rather than diminished by this nearer view. The greenery of the garden provides a background for the ancient masterpieces of Greek art.
In spite of the thousands of scratches which show the discomforts of the horses' travels, says one observer, "in spite of the streaks of corroding copper and the remnants of the coat of gold which covered them, they are still the most beautiful horses that man has ever made—veritable horses of the sun." Also they are much-travelled horses. No one knows with certainty where they began their journeying. They may have been made by Lysippus, of Chios, and taken by the Emperor Theodosius to Byzantium; or they may have been found by the Romans at Corinth, taken to Rome, and from Rome to Byzantium. Eventually they reached Constantinople and were decorating the Hippodrome when the Venetians took that city in the very early thirteenth century and carried the famous horses back to Venice. For six centuries they remained on St. Mark's, and then Napoleon took them to Paris, where they adorned the Arc de Triomphe for nearly twenty years before they were restored to Venice. When the Germans threatened Venice, the horses were taken to Rome and placed in the cellars of the Palazzo di Venezia. Their reappearance in the open air was an impressive sign of the coming of peace.

INSPIRED BY GRIEF.

A Bit of Literary and War History.

Many competent judges say that Lt.-Col. John McCrae's "In Flanders Fields" is the most poignant of all the poems written during the war, and the most certain to have an enduring place in English literature. The incident that led to the writing of the verses is recalled by the return to Canada of Lt.-Col. L. Miller Cosgrave, D.S.O., who brought back to Ottawa for demobilization the First and Second Batteries of the Canadian Field Artillery. As the "baby" subaltern, Lieut. Morrison answered Col. (now Gen.) Morrison's call to join the battery on August 9, 1914, and was at the front with the guns continuously till March, 1919. The First Brigade Canadian Artillery went into line along the Yser Canal in February, 1915, and there on May 2nd, during the fierce cannonading that accompanied the attempt of the enemy to force the passage of the Yser and gain the Channel ports, Lieut. Alexis Helmer, an officer of the battery, was killed. Morrison, McCrae, Cosgrave and other officers were present at the hasty burial of Helmer's body in a shell-hole spot on the canal bank, where, despite all the churning of the surrounding ground, it still rests undisturbed.

Near by and closer to the canal is one of the irregular patches of burial ground, common near the front, where even so early as May, 1915, here were buried British, French, Belgian, Moroccan and Canadian dead beneath their crosses "row on row." The poppies were beginning to bloom and the larks were singing when young Helmer was laid away with the smile on his face that sudden death had not disturbed. Col. Cosgrave says McCrae was deeply moved during the burial. He went to his dugout muttering to himself like a man putting an idea into suitable words, and in twenty minutes came back with the verses, "In Flanders Fields," substantially as they were afterwards printed.

Mrs. Helmer, mother of the young officer whose death gave Col. McCrae his theme, did not know of the friendship between the poet and her son until Col. Cosgrave told her of it.

McCrae, killed by overwork, followed Helmer to a resting place at the front. Col. Cosgrave came through and is back home in Toronto. His D.S.O. is one of the relatively few that have a bar to it. The original decoration was won on the Somme in 1916, out beyond the Sunken Road at Courcellette, when in a reconnaissance of the front line he discovered and guided back two companies of a Canadian battalion that had got lost. The bar was added because of signal bravery in the saving of life on the Zonnebeke road during the Passchendaele operations of 1917. Eight lorries loaded with 9.2-inch and 8-inch shells were on the way up to the guns when the Germans, who had direct observation on the ground, began to shell the lorries and the marching men who also occupied the road. A direct hit set one of the lorries and its contents on fire and the great shells began to explode, carrying death and wounds to dozens of men round about. The officer in charge of the convoy was killed and most of the men. Col. Cosgrave and a young lorry driver, who got a D.C.M. for his fine services, ditched the burning lorries and collected the wounded, placing them in safety in shell holes near the roadside, where the fragments of the exploding ammunition passed over them harmlessly. That is why the "baby" of the battery who went off to the front almost five years ago as a junior lieutenant, comes back as Lt.-Col. Cosgrave, D.S.O. with a bar. That and a fine record of over four years of active service which ended at Mons, where he commanded the artillery of the 9th Brigade.

THE ARCTIC TERN.

Birds Are Greatest Daylight Savers.

In the World.
The greatest daylight saver in the world—the Arctic tern.

Many years before the Clumsy Mortal began to puzzle his brain with a scheme to utilize an extra hour of daylight, the Arctic tern had discovered how it is possible to spend over half the year in regions where the sun never sets. Could the above mentioned C. M. follow his example, the lighting problem would vanish into nothingness. And this is how the ingenious bird manages:

He has his summer home in the Arctic circle, the Land of the Midnight Sun, where, for many weeks, darkness is unknown. When he sees the sun making its way alarmingly near the horizon, finally dipping for a few hours each day out of sight, he begins to think of his winter home in the Antarctic circle, even though twilight and dawn still overlap so that it is never dark.

"This is God's own country in the summer, but it belongs to the Prince of Darkness in the winter," he says to himself, and bids Mrs. Tern and the children prepare for their yearly trip south.

Nor do they stop at Palm Beach. For the tern is one who does everything thoroughly. If he wants daylight and sunlight, it is not for an eight-hour day, but for the whole twenty-four hours. If he goes south, he stops barely short of the South Pole. It is an eleven thousand mile trip, but the Tern family are good fliers and can easily make two or three hundred miles a day without motor trouble.

By the time he reaches the Antarctic, he finds his home basking in the sunlight for virtually the whole day. About June 15 he is back in his Arctic home. His summer estate is on the most northern land in the world, as far north as the cat and anything else on which to construct his nest. So Arctic are the conditions under which the terns breed that the first nest found by man in this region, only seven and a half degrees from the pole, contained a downy chick surrounded by a wall of newly-fallen snow that had been scooped out of the nest by the parent.

About fourteen weeks later, August 25, when the little terns are full grown, add have become experienced aviators, the entire family start out for that long journey to the regions of greatest heat, across the equator, and then on to the southern edge of the Antarctic continent. They probably spend a few weeks longer in their winter than in their summer home, and this would leave scarcely twenty weeks for the round trip of 22,000 miles.

In the north, the midnight sun, which has already appeared before their arrival in the middle of June, never sets during their entire stay at the breeding grounds. In their Antarctic sojourn the birds do not see a sunset for two months, and the sun dips only a little way below the horizon during the rest of the time, while broad daylight during the winter and summer, and with more daylight than dark during the spring and fall.

A second record they hold, as champion migrants of the world. In order to cover 22,000 miles of their round trip in twenty weeks, 150 miles in a straight line must be their daily task, and this is undoubtedly multiplied several times by their zig-zag twistings in pursuit of food. What their track is over this great distance no one knows. The great flocks of thousands and thousands of these terns which range from pole to pole have never been noted by ornithologists competent to indicate their preferred route and their time schedule. They are slender and graceful, long-winged, and with regular and hovering flight. First cousins to the gull, they are gray sea birds with red bills.

A New Landmark.

A new landmark will shortly appear above the trees of Kew Gardens near London. Already there is of course the famous Pagoda, but the new landmark will rise many feet into the air above the Pagoda. It is the giant flagstaff, weighing 18 tons, and 215 feet long, presented by the British Columbian Government to Kew Gardens some four years ago. Arriving in London by the R. M. S. P. in December, 1915, it was afterwards towed up the river to Kew, and is about to be erected by Canadians in the gardens. Its first use, so it is said, will probably be that of flying the Flag of Victory and Peace in the forthcoming peace celebrations.

The Indian Calendar.

Among the Indians time is calculated by moons instead of months. January is called "the hard moon"; February, "the raccoon moon"; March, "the dove eye moon"; April, "the moon in which geese lay eggs"; May, "the planting moon"; June, "the moon when strawberries are red"; July, "the moon when choke berries are ripe"; August, "the harvest moon"; September, "the moon when rice is laid up to dry"; October, "the rice-drying moon"; November, "the deer-killing moon"; and December, "the deer moon."

Power Boats In Rapids.

Capt. Klaus Larsen, in his little motor boat Ferro, made a successful trip from the foot of the cataract through the Whirlpool rapids of Niagara Falls on September 19, 1910. Despite the bashing of the whirlpool rapids, Larsen went through safely; the little boat was lost to sight most of the time, but at Great Wave it was shot 20 feet out of the water. Except the old Maid of the Mist, sent through in 1854 to avoid seizure, Larsen's is the only engine-propelled craft to have gone through the rapids.

MAKES BUTTER IN 8 MINUTES

8 SIZES OF GLASS AND METAL

The DAZEY cannot be compared with any other churn on the market because there is such an immense difference. The DAZEY is not an imitation; it is an entirely new departure in churn making. It is better. Just think of the difference between this churn and the old style dish, or wooden churn that take at least one-half hour to churn, sometimes two hours. Surely your time is worth 15c per hour. At this rate the DAZEY would save you $19.50 every year or many times its cost.

THE DAZEY IS AS EASILY CLEANED AS A TIN

PAINT. Because the receptacle which holds the cream is removable from the gearing, and as there are no rough or uneven surfaces of bearings inside.

DAZEY METAL CHURN ARE MORE SANITARY

The DAZEY Makes More Butter Than Any Other Churn Out of the Same Amount of Cream.

This can be easily proven by putting one-half of your cream in each churn and then weighing the butter the scales will show the facts.

The DAZEY receptacle cannot absorb a particle of butter fat or moisture and therefore will never become rancid.

There is nothing about the DAZEY to wear out. There are no complicated parts, very simple runs light and will last for years.

WE WANT YOU TO TRY THE DAZEY CHURN

Look to the Future

Begin with the Boys

HE glorious victories of Drake and Nelson were destined to be the foundation of our Empire and the guarantee of the freedom of the seas, which makes possible the vast international trade of Britain and her Dominions.

And yet when Drake and Nelson chose the sea as their life-work, who was there to know what would be the overwhelming consequences of their decision?

To emphasize Canada's opportunities and responsibilities on the sea.

To raise funds for the relief of our merchant seamen, injured in the war, and for dependents of those who were killed.

To maintain sailors' homes in our ports.

To train boys and young men for our merchant ships by the organization of Boys' Naval Brigades.

Patron:
H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES
Dominion President:
COMMODORE
AEMILIUS JARVIS

Today, if you have any question in your mind as to whether you should support the work of the Boys' Naval Brigades, study the matter with an eye to the future. Get clearly in mind the tremendous importance of Canadian products reaching foreign markets, which can only be assured by the building of a great Canadian Mercantile Fleet, manned with Canadian Seamen!

We may build ships by the thousand, but if we cannot man them ourselves our position is still economically unsound. If we do not train Canadian lads to man our merchant fleet, we shall be left behind in the race for export markets—we shall have missed the greatest opportunity for trade expansion in all history!

What will YOU do to help some Canadian boy who is anxious to learn seamanship, and so be of the greatest service to his country?

Let your contribution to the fund be a worthy answer. Help them by giving!

"Thank God I have done my duty!"

The Monthly Meeting of the I. O. D. E.

The monthly meeting of the I. O. D. E. was held on October 6th in the Public Library rooms, the Regent presiding, with an average attendance.

After the reading of the minutes the treasurer reported a balance of $250.27.

During the afternoon five new members were received and welcomed into the chapter and one name presented for election. The sum of fifty dollars was voted to be given to the I. O. D. E. war memorial fund and twenty-five dollars to the local branch of the G. W. V. A. Re the fund for the education of deceased or disabled children.

The Committee reported one case where help would be acceptable, his and the Secretary was advised to take this matter up with headquarters. The vote was unanimous in favor of the formation of a Provincial Chapter I. O. D. E. for Ontario. A communication from the Navy League with whom the I. O. D. E. is closely affiliated was then read. It was decided to hold a tea and sale of home-cooking in Naylor's new garage on the afternoon of November 11th, Armistice day, and a concert in the evening in the new Empire Theatre, and in this way raise our annual contribution to the Navy League. The Regent then brought to a close a most interesting meeting.

Organization for the Victory Loan campaign in Hastings County is well under way.

"I Hope Every City and District Will Win My Flag"

When Edward, Prince of Wales—eager, bright eyed, smiling and sincere—arrived in Canada in August, and when he voiced his great admiration of the wonderful achievements of Canadians, on the fields of battle and at home, once again we were thrilled with joyous pride.

He asked concerning Canada's reconstruction programme, and when he was told of the Victory Loan 1919, he graciously consented to the use of his Coat of Arms on a flag, which is to be the prize of honour for districts achieving their quota in the loan.

In dedicating "The Prince's Flag" at Ottawa on Labor Day, His Royal Highness said in part:

"It is a great joy to me to be associated with the loan, which is the bridge between war and peace, and which is finishing off the job."

"I hope every city and district will win my flag." Striking and beautiful in design, this flag will form not only a unique memento of Victory Year, but a lasting and outstanding souvenir of the visit of His Royal Highness—a visit which will remain as one of the most memorable events in Canada's history.

The reproduction above shows the design of the flag. The body is white, the edge red; in the upper left hand corner is the Union Jack, and in the lower right hand corner the Prince of Wales' Coat of Arms.

The flag is made in two sizes, 4 feet 6 inches by 9 feet for small cities, towns and villages, and 7 feet by 13 feet 6 inches for cities of over 10,000 population.

Canada has been divided into canvassing districts by the Victory Loan Organization. Each city forms one district. Other districts have been determined according to population.

Each of these canvassing districts has been allotted a certain amount in Victory Bonds to sell. To win the Prince's Flag, therefore, a district has to sell its allotment. That is the one and simple condition.

Anticipating that many districts will buy far beyond their allotment, the organization decided that for each twenty-five per cent. excess of the quota one Prince of Wales' Crest be awarded. Thus the winners in a district doubling its quota will be the proud winners of four small crests for their Honour Flag. These crests will be sewn to the flag. The Prince's Crest—the three ostrich plumes—is shown at the top of the coat of arms.

To every organization with fifty or more employees, where seventy-five per cent. of the enrollment invests a total of ten per cent. of the annual payroll in Victory Bonds, a supplementary Prince of Wales Flag in smaller form—48 inches by 34 inches—will be awarded.

The allotment for each district has been carefully considered, and is based on a conservative estimate of the purchasing power of the district.

Your district can sell its allotment and thus win the Prince's Flag, provided each person does his or her share.

You will gladly do your part and encourage your neighbour to do his.

Remember YOUR purchase may be the one that decides whether or not your district is to be the proud possessor of the Prince's Flag.

The Prince's Motto is "I Serve"
Will You also Serve?

GERMAN "FUNK HOLES."

Men Who Engineered War Took No Risks.

The former headquarters of the Kaiser and his general staff is disclosing some extraordinary queer facts these days about the men who engineered the world war. Take, for one, Hindenburg, Germany's superman, around whom reams of poetry have been written, disclosing him as a fearless Napoleon leading his troops to victory. As a matter of fact, he spent a great deal of time in a wonderfully constructed "funk hole," or dugout, underneath the grounds of his villa near Spa. It may be noted, is almost on the German border and so far from where battle lines used to be that it was almost a day's journey in a fast motor car to get within sound of the big guns. The Kaiser, too, had similar hiding places at Neudeck, near a comic opera trench system about which he is said to have paraded for the benefit of motion pictures. At each of their villas there were elaborate electrical instruments which would set up furious buzzing whenever an airplane approached anywhere near. At the Spa, from this contrivance Hindenburg and the Kaiser used to run to shelter, it is reported. People who worked about Hindenburg's establishment said that he was continually running for cover.

Allied representatives on the International Armistice Commission are now occupying Hindenburg's headquarters, and they were amazed when they discovered this underground refuge of the great warrior. The entrance was through the dining-room. From there a flight of steps led down to a tiled anti-room which, by the way, now serves as a very good pantry for the victors.

From the tiled room there was another flight of steps that led down to the real dugout. This was blocked by a huge iron door about one inch in thickness, which could be locked from the inside only. Within it was fastened by a double bolt which would do credit to a Canadian banking establishment.

The dugout itself was luxuriously equipped. On the floor was a heavy flowered carpet and a Louis XV table and chairs added to the artistic arrangement. The walls, which were of corrugated iron, were painted white and the whole place brilliantly illuminated by electricity. On a little table was an electric fan to keep the marsh cool in summer, while an electric stove provided for heat in winter. The room was about 14 x 12 feet and was protected by four to six feet of earth above it.

The emperor's dugout was similar, except that it was much deeper under the ground and there were two entrances, one through the villa and the other from the grounds. The main entrance was from the house and led down a long flight of steps.

Another touch to the pictures was added to this when a German resident of Aix-la-Chapelle told the correspondent of the Associated Press that the crown prince spent virtually all of his time in amusement.

Extraordinary Wagers.

Curious wagers are not so common now as in bygone days. In 1670, for instance, Lord Digby staked £50 that he would walk five miles round Newmarket Heath in a certain time, barefooted and stark naked, and lost by the narrow margin of half a minute, the King and all the court being witnesses of the performance.

In the latter half of the eighteenth century a Liverpool scientist bet a brother scientist that he would read a newspaper by the light of a farthing dip at a distance of 80 feet. The scientist merely costed the inside of a shallow wooden box with sloping pieces of looking-glass, so as to form a concave lens, placed it behind his farthing dip, and easily read the small print at the distance named. The winning of the wager was witnessed by a Liverpool dockmaster, who ultimately applied the idea to lighthouse requirements, and evolved the modern reflected light.

About two years ago, during a yachting trip of members of the Mersey Docks and Harbor Board, Mr. A. W. Willmer, a leading Liverpool cotton broker, was presented with a pair of wooden shoes for his birthday, and another member of the board offered to contribute a sum of money to two charities if Mr. Willmer would go to the Cotton Exchange wearing them. For sweet charity's sake, Mr. Willmer appeared on Change wearing the wooden shoes, and the stakes were handed over to him.

Perhaps the limit was reached in a certain town in Canada, where a man propelled a green pea with a toothpick for about 80 yards along the pavement with half an hour of the watching time, and won his wager.—Tit-Bits.

Paper Clothing.

Underclothing made of finely crimped or grained paper, is now being manufactured in Japan. After the paper has been cut to a pattern the different parts are sewn together and hemmed, and the places where the buttonholes are to be formed are strengthened with calico or linen. The paper is very strong and at the same time very flexible. After a garment has been worn a few hours it will interfere with the perspiration of the body no more than do garments made of cotton fabric. The paper is not sized, nor is it impermeable. After becoming wet the paper is difficult to tear. When an endeavor is made to tear it by hand it presents almost as much resistance as the thin skin used for making gloves.—Family Herald.

A Conservative Yank.

James Murray, 105 years old, who for 75 years, according to the New York Tribune, has lived in Trinity Church Cemetery, which is within the limits of New York City somewhere near 154th street, has never in his life ridden on a trolley car or seen a skyscraper building, and says he has no desire to visit the lower part of Manhattan Island for any such experience.

TOBACCO GROWERS.

Value of Fall Ploughing Has Been Tested.

Judging by the result of careful tests made during the last few years it appears as if the practice of fall manuring and ploughing tobacco land should become more general in Canada.

In the Province of Quebec it is obvious that there is hardly sufficient time from the end of the winter till transplanting time to allow a thorough preparation and manuring of the land. In general there is more time for this work in the early fall, and the manure applied then will have a better chance to rot and become thoroughly mixed with the soil.

In the tobacco-growing districts of Ontario the working season in the spring is much longer than in the tobacco districts of Quebec. However, it has been proved that ploughing the tobacco land in the fall allows a better distribution of the work on the farm, and keeping the horses busy when there is comparatively little of the work to do outdoors.

Fall ploughing has proved one of the most effective means of combating the insect pests of tobacco, especially the cutworm. Some Ontario growers object to this practice on the grounds that land which has been fall ploughed must be reploughed the following spring, meaning an extra expense. The cost of ploughing again in the spring, however, is very trifling compared with the damage that can be caused by an invasion of cutworms.

Careful experiments conducted on the Harrow Tobacco Station for the past three years have proven conclusively that fall ploughing is not only a good practice but is profitable.

In every instance fall ploughed plots retained the moisture for a much longer period and yielded heavier crops than the plots manured and ploughed in the spring. Even on land of a fairly sandy nature this has been the case, and it has been found that though this sandy soil becomes compacted during the winter it can easily be prepared for tobacco in the spring by a thorough disking.

Fall ploughing of tobacco land can therefore be recommended on the following grounds: Better utilization of manure; more thorough eradication of weeds; better conservation of moisture, cheapest means of combating the tobacco pests.

A New O.A.C. Wheat.

With the object of originating better varieties of winter wheat than those already in cultivation, crosses have been made at the Ontario Agricultural College between the Dawson's Golden Chaff and some of the varieties of particularly high quality for bread production. A cross made between the Dawson's Golden Chaff and the Bulgarian wheat, has surpassed both its parents in average yield per acre, and is a most equal to the Bulgarian in bread production. This variety has been given the name "O.A.C. No. 194," and has been distributed throughout Ontario in connection with the co-operative experiments in each of the past three years. It has made the highest record in each of these years. It proved to be one of the hardiest varieties in the tests of the past year. This new wheat should be available in fairly large quantities by another season. It will be distributed in small lots for co-operative experiments to those who wish to test varieties of winter wheat.

Keeping Poultry.

1. Improve your poultry stock.
2. Keep one of the general-purpose breeds, such as the Plymouth Rock, Wyandottes, Orpingtons, or Rhode Island Red.
3. Provide one clean, dry, vermin-free nest for every four or five hens.
4. Conclude all hatching by May 15 and sell or confine male birds during the remainder of the summer.
5. Gather eggs once daily during ordinary times, and twice daily during hot or rainy weather.
6. In summer, place eggs as soon as gathered in a cool, dry room.
7. Use all small and dirty eggs at home.
8. Market eggs frequently, twice a week, if possible, during the summer.
9. In taking eggs to market, protect them from the sun's rays.
10. In selling, insist that the transaction be on a "loss-off" basis, for, if care has been given the eggs this system will yield money to the producer.

Embargo on Seed Grain.

A seed grain embargo has been recommended by Saskatchewan Agriculture, applicable to certain parts of the province. The proposed embargo includes that part of Saskatchewan in townships one to eighteen inclusive, west of the third meridian, and from township nineteen the northern boundary settlement west of range ten, west of the third meridian. It is estimated by the Provincial Department of Agriculture that at least one million bushels of seed wheat will require to be purchased by farmers who did not raise enough seed this year for next season's use. It is also estimated that about one and a half million bushels of oats will require to be bought.

Good Recovery in Saskatchewan.

The Provincial Department of Agriculture estimates Saskatchewan's wheat crop at a little over 100 million bushels per acre, or 88 1/2 million tons. While the crop is very much smaller than last year, the value only five million dollars less than 1917. At one time, Premier Macdonald, it looked as if Saskatchewan would not have 50,000,000 bushels this year.

In 1912 the U. S. Government paid the average price paid per pound to American producers sheep at $4.54, and in 1917 $9.50.

Quite devoid of public spirit a gas well at Pelican Rapids, on the Athabasca river, is wasting about $400 worth of gas a day, throwing it carelessly into the air at the rate of nearly 4,000,000 cubic feet every 24 hours. For a period of 30 years, it has defied all efforts to bottle up its riches for future use. Now, however, the Government has taken it in hand. Mr. H. L. War Days

Quarrel Resumed

It is funny how quickly we slip back into the old grooves of life. I thought I had been jarred out of them by the war and wrenched by sad things. But it is true that in most Canadian homes life goes on to-day pretty much as it did five blank years ago. The table with the same noisy great-staircase sons come to the breakfast table. The mother, perhaps, a little more graying to their voices. The father, perhaps, a little more graying to their voices. The father, perhaps, a little more graying to their voices.

With the men home life goes on pretty much as before. The harsh old realities of war are slipping into the misty back-ground. We can never forget the price in flesh and blood; we could easily forget the price in treasure.

When we hear of plans for the Victory Loan 1919, we are brought back with a jerk to the hard fact that the cost of Canada's Victory has not been fully paid, and that the future lays burdens upon us also.

GETTING RID OF SLUMS.

Newly-appointed Minister of Health at Work in London.

Extensive schemes for the demolition of slum areas and the rehousing of the working classes are to be taken in hand energetically by the new British Health Ministry.

"We intend to get the houses and to clear out the slums," said an official of the Ministry recently. "But before the slums can be destroyed, it is essential that new houses should be provided for the inhabitants, and it is well to keep in mind the existing difficulties with regard to labor and material."

"The Ministry are aware that a very large number of soldiers married during the war. Owing to the great interest shown in the housing question by the men who are still in the army of occupation, the authorities are sending out lecturers to France to explain the Government's intentions on the subject."

"One of these lecturers, who has just returned from the continent, said that he had been inundated with queries as to the possibilities which exist for the purchase of small houses, and he formed the opinion that the majority of demobilized soldiers hoped to become property owners on a small scale."

Among the schemes with which the Ministry are about to deal, are the following:

Southwark—The rehousing of 4,300 persons of the working class. Dwellings for 620 persons have already been erected on one section of the area, and another section has been cleared.

Shoreditch—The rehousing of 5,500 persons by the purchase of old houses, which are to be demolished and rebuilt.

Bermondsey—The rehousing of some 1,500 people in block dwellings. Hammersmith—The reconstruction of two areas.

Fulham—The demolition and rebuilding of a number of houses.

Hampstead—The reconstruction of nine areas, comprising no fewer than 75 properties.

At Tottenham it is proposed to develop certain lands on the lines of a garden city, and at Old Oak and Nubury 910 new houses are to be taken in hand.

An interesting experiment is to be made at Hammersmith, where, by arrangement with the Ministry, 18 cottages will be erected on designs which won the prizes in the competition promoted by the Royal Institute of British Architects. When the work is completed, one cottage of each type will be left unoccupied, so that the details of the method of construction may be easily explained.

Beginning to Use Hastings County Ores

For decades Canada has been a land of barren wilderness; but, in Hastings County, the riches of the earth are beginning to be revealed. The county is rich in iron, and the government is beginning to use the county's ores.

The government in the past did not realize at all the great value of the county's ores. The county is rich in iron, and the government is beginning to use the county's ores.

See, Marmora and is the northern part of the county great stores of iron ore untouched. Lithographic stone a fine grained homogeneous limestone, spreads extensively over the southern portion of the county.

So the has been the extent of the mining efforts in Hastings. Indifference has prevented Hastings from realizing the magnificent treasures stored beneath its rocky and unprospecting surface. For almost five decades practically untouched save for a few small mines, which, because of primitive methods employed and lack of sufficient capital have failed. But now Canada realizes more fully than prior to the war the tremendous extent of her mineral wealth and she realizes too, that this resource must be developed more rapidly and more efficiently. The mineralogical report shows that a considerable amount of Ontario's minerals lie in Hastings county.

This matter, however must not be viewed from a purely commercial standpoint. For a century people have lived and died on those little farms. They have grown up in poverty lacking the means to abandon the county.

There is something else, too, which holds them. Despite their apathy they have still great confidence in the county. They tell stories of hidden spots of gold and of great caves of sparkling jewels. These stories have passed from generation to generation and many have been the expeditions on dark and terrible nights to wrest from their inhuman guards these mighty treasures. There are many Wolford Webbers, in Hastings and it is this background of legendary glory which weaves about their lives a golden halo that prevents them from realizing to its full extent the dreariness of their lives.

This year Victory Loan will take the load of war bills off our back and give us a little into a prosperous perfect peace.

"A Joan of Arc Machine"

SHE withstood everything in the field and above all, was still, is the last and only car to survive until the cessation of hostilities."—Extract from letter received by Ford Motor Company from a British Soldier, in Africa.

Over shell-torn roads, through water soaked fields, second only to the tanks in its power to climb debris and crater holes, the Ford car made a world famous record in the fighting area of the great war. In press despatches, in field reports, in letters, in rhyme and song the praises of the Ford were sounded.

In France - 160 cars out of 1,000 were Fords
In Italy - 850 cars out of 1,000 were Fords
In Egypt - 990 cars out of 1,000 were Fords
In Mesopotamia - 999 cars out of 1,000 were Fords

Sunny South Concert

(As seen by the Author for the first time.)

The Sunny South Minstrels made their first appearance in the Empire Theatre on Saturday evening last. The theatre was packed to the doors. The program given by the minstrels was to one unused to minstrel shows an unusual and very interesting one. The play which ran through the whole program pictured a typical negro family with the usual tenses of the family and the love stories of the two eldest girls. The ventriloquist showed his power as mimicker, imitating first the hounds on a hunt. First as they were just being let loose from the stable, then about a half mile from there and lastly in the woods on the hunt.

The contortionist was a wonder. It seemed impossible that a man could turn and twist so many ways at the same time. One number in particular would seem absolutely impossible.

He stood with his back to the audience and slowly turned from his waist until from waist up he was facing the audience, then just as slowly he turned back again.

The music was very much enjoyed by all. The concert closed with the singing of God Save the King.

Wedding Bells

Box-Howe

There was a very pretty wedding at the home Mr. and Mrs. Alex Howe, Queensboro, on the fifteenth of October, when their daughter, Nellie, one of the most popular of the young ladies of Queensboro was united in marriage to Ambrose H. Box, of Callabogie. Rev. A. Thomson, B. D. Eldorado officiated. Over thirty guests, mostly relatives of the bride, were present. After the ceremony, which took place at 1.30 a. m. the party enjoyed a dainty wedding breakfast.

The fair young bride was dressed in her travelling costume of dark brown tulle, with hat and fur to match. The happy pair motored to Tweed to take the train to Toronto and several points in Northern Ontario. The bride was the recipient of many beautiful and useful presents. The gift of the groom to the bride was a beautiful set of sable furs. The many friends of this young couple all join in wishing them many happy and prosperous years together.

JENNER-BROUGHTON

The marriage of Miss Annie Jean Broughton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Broughton, 100 Springhurst Avenue, took place Tuesday, October 14, at 3 p. m. in North Parkdale Methodist Church, to Mr. Thomas Jenner, late of the 9th Howitzer Battery, C.F.A., son of Mr. and Mrs. A. T. Jenner, Toronto, (formerly of) Millbridge, Ontario.

Rev. G. C. Balfour officiated. The bride was given away by her father. She wore white georgette and crepe de-chine with pearl trimmings, her tulle veil, which was trimmed with pearls, falling from a wreath of orange blossoms, and she carried a shower of Ophelia and sweetheart roses. She was attended by Miss Hazel Campbell, who wore silver-gray georgette with steel trimmings and picture hat of palm velvet, and carried a bouquet of Ophelias. Little Clarissa Jenner acted as flower girl and wore pale green georgette over silk. Mr. S. Elm Edwards of London, Ontario, late of the 2nd Divisional Signaller, acted as groomsmen. The wedding march was played by Miss Violet Norris. During the signing of the register Mr. Wm. Norris sang "Oh King of Love". The groom's gift to the bride was a ring set with a solitary ruby, to the groomsmen gold cuff-links, to the flower girl a silver ring, and to the organist a gold brooch.

After the ceremony the reception was held at the bride's home. The bride's mother, wearing black satin with corsage boutonniere of red roses. The groom's mother wore a dress of plum color satin and corsage bouquet of violets.

The bride's travelling suit was a navy blue serge with a hat to match, wearing a Hudson seal scarf, the gift of the groom. The happy couple left on the 6.35 train for Detroit, Cleveland and other western cities. On their return they will reside in London, Ont. The bride was the recipient of many beautiful gifts, mostly from friends.

hem being a parlour suite from the bride's parents and a dining-room suite from the groom's parents.

MOSIER-RYAN

Crookston was the scene of a very pretty wedding on Wednesday evening, October 15th, at the home of the bride's grandmother, Mrs. Isabella Mitts, when Lillian Ryan, only daughter of Mrs. Emma Ryan became the bride of Corporal W. Mosier. The groom was one of our gallant soldiers who enlisted at an early stage of the war. The ceremony was solemnized by Rev. A. Frederick Pastor of Ivanhoe Methodist Church. The happy couple left amid best wishes and showers of confetti for their honeymoon at Niagara Falls and New York, after their return they will reside in Tweed.

Ardent Temperance Worker

In the early days of the "horseless carriage" many strange wheels driven by gasoline were to be seen. How- ever Monday's referendum issue pro- duced not only many ardent temper- ance workers but also some freakish conveyances. One local young lady who was unable to drive her accus- tomed car owing to its being indis- posed resurrected an old Ford. With steam streaming from the radiator and the many loose parts rattling to- gether she pursued her way from home to poll and poll to home. Being but slightly acquainted with the Ford's mechanism she was unable to reverse so to avoid the necessity of turning round she piloted her precar- ious craft around the nearest block. Arriving at the poll down town the broke refused to work and seeing a friend she called for help, and then this quiet gentleman sprinted down the centre of the street, overhauled the car and rescued its fair occupant. To avoid fatigue had there been any serious breakdown the chaffeuse had a tea-kettle at her right hand. Cheer up, it got the voters there anyway.

G. W. V. A. MEETING

The regular meeting of the G. W. V. was held in their Club Rooms on Tuesday October 21st. Over thirty members were present. It was de- cided that a dance be held in the Ar- mouries, Madoc on Friday Oct. 31st. A motion was passed that a weekly dance be held in the Armouries open to the public. It was moved that a letter be sent to allmembers request- ing them to be present at the next meeting to be held in the Town Hall Tuesday October 28th, as important business is to be discussed. Three membership applications were read and accepted.

A Local Fish Story

Owing to the heavy rains lately it was supposed that the water in Moira Lake would have risen greatly, but much to the surprise of an observer it was found that the water recently had much subsided. An explanation of this strange phenomenon has been suddenly brought to light that Henry Mitchell had landed a "Junge of immense proportions. For details see Henry.

Hymeneal

The marriage of Mr. Stanley Bar- riage, of Belleville, and Miss Stella Anne Johnson, of town, was solemn- ized with Nuptial Mass on Tuesday Morning the 21st at 7.30 A.M., in the Sacred Heart Church. The happy couple were attended by Mr. Clement and Miss Bessie Cox. After the cere- mony they repaired to the home of the brides mother where a few friends partook of a dainty lunch. In the afternoon they left for the East via Belleville. Mr. and Mrs. Barriage will reside in Belleville. The Review joins in congratulations.

together, for M. Veaudry had gathered from Mr. Randall's manner that he suspected their guest of being guilty of something more criminal than assuming a name to which he had no right.

Thus, even while the young couple and Aaron prayed that Tom Randall's arrival would be hastened and coincident with it free vent could be given to their suspicions, Larkin Bunce earnestly hoped to the contrary—hoped that Kirby would suddenly realize his danger, growing the more deadly and certain as every minute passed, and would ride for the river before the coming of Nemesis.

But evidently nothing was more remote from that reckless young gentleman's intention, for, unmindful of his partner's increasing uneasiness and that both were the object of watchful, hostile eyes, he continued to act as if time and opportunity had been created solely for Adele and himself. Dinner finally at an end, he and his young hostess, entirely absorbed in each other's society, sought the drawing room balcony, while the others, with the exception of Bunce, indulged in a game of piquet. M. Veaudry, proving a wretched partner, his entire attention being occupied with the couple on the balcony.

M. Veaudry, owing to his preoccupation, proving such a thankless partner, Mme. Davezac at last turned to Bunce and suggested that he and Kirby join the game in lieu of the young couple and the judge.

"Eh, truly, Anatole," she added, with some sympathy, tapping the other's arm with her fan, "you cannot keep your mind on the game, and so we are unable to play. Will you surrender your place to Colonel Moreau?"

"It seems to me that I have already done that," he responded gloomily.

With as good grace as possible yielding to the dictates of courtesy, Kirby unwillingly terminated his tete-a-tete with Adele, and as he approached the card table his place was promptly preempted by the young Creole, who followed Miss Randall to the balcony. It was the first time he had been alone with Adele, and his long repressed emotion and bitterness found vent.

"Ah, marmelle, it is true," he said reproachfully. "You are changed—so quickly. Yes, you will say I wanted to see you happier, but I also had wished to be the one to make you so. Adele," he added earnestly, striving to take her hand, "if this difference in you comes only from the gratitude you feel to—to Colonel Moreau because he tried to protect your father I shall be happy. But how have this man bewitched you that?"

"I don't understand you, Anatole," she said quietly, drawing away.

"I think I do not understand you, Adele. I think you know from the first he is not Colonel Moreau. I have some very strange suspicion of him."

Instantly the woman in her was up in arms, seeking to defend, eager to do battle for the object it sought to shield. "It is enough that I know he is a man who has had a great wrong done him. That's one way of making a woman believe that you love her—when she's trying to help some one in trouble, make it harder for her to be jealous," she finished, with a bitter laugh.

"I am jealous—I do not deny that. But I am, first of all things, a man of honor," he said quietly enough, although white with anger. His voice trembled with emotion as he added, with simple dignity: "Do you think a man of honor has suspicion of a rival only because he is jealous? Do you think I would suspect him only for that?"

"I can't discuss it with you," she returned coldly. Leaning on the balcony railing, she promptly became absorbed in the wonders of the night.

Recognizing the sign of dismissal, he yet hesitated, miserably conscious that he had offended, but still feeling justified in the position he had assumed, still holding that those emotions which had prompted his words were but natural, impersonal and sincere. It was his right to protect the girl he loved from the wiles of a nameless adventurer, of whose integrity he had the gravest doubts. It was his right to protect her from herself, for deny it as she might, it was all too bitterly apparent that this debauched impostor had succeeded where others had failed and that Adele had discarded all sorrow with her mourning and was yielding to a fascination that he firmly believed would prove her ruin.

While he still hesitated, afraid to make an enemy of the girl he loved, yet stubborn in his resolution to thwart Kirby, Aaron Randall, suspecting some such controversy as had taken place, joined them on the balcony, and Anatole, with evident relief, turned again to Adele.

"Mademoiselle, here is your cousin.

He will not be thought to be jealous," he said gravely. "I ask him to tell you what he will tell me, I ask him to tell you what he thinks about this gentleman."

"Cousin Aaron," replied the girl, turning and confronting the two from whom she had most to fear, "in my brother's absence you respect my authority here, do you not? Very well, then, my introduction of this gentleman as Colonel Moreau is enough for you."

"It must be, Cousin Adele," replied Aaron, evidently greatly perplexed and troubled.

"And I am responsible for my actions only to my brother," added the girl, looking directly at M. Veaudry.

He flushed under the scrutiny of her eyes and the significant infection of her voice.

"In his absence I would protect you. I would act for him," he protested desperately.

"You may when you have his authority. Until then I bid you adieu." And, with an elaborate courtesy and pleasant smile, she vanished through the window, while the gentlemen remained on the balcony, a prey to the most disquieting thoughts.

"You see how she have change—in this one day—with him," bitterly exclaimed Anatole, pointing through the open window to where in a distant corner of the room Kirby sat at the card table. Mr. Randall merely nodded and gloomily chewed his cheroot. He was facing a difficult problem and praying for the arrival of young Randall.

Presently from the music room there came the subdued harmony of a guitar and harp, and when the soft prelude had finished Adele's fine contralto took up the theme, singing, "I sent thee late a rose wreath, not so much honoring thee." It was Kirby's favorite song, snatches of which Anatole had heard the other humming at intervals since his arrival. Clearer, sweeter, purer sounded the words until the music ascended like an anthem and came stealing out of the window to mingle with the soft murmur of the night, to blend with the unheard, far distant harmony of the stars. Anatole stood transfixed, a prey to the bitterest emotions to which man was ever hostage.

"You hear?" he cried passionately, turning to Aaron. "For the first time since how long? Now she wears no more black. Now she is no more silent. Now she sings, not for her brother, not for those who love her, not for me."

"No; it's for Colonel Moreau," finished the older man, throwing away his cigar.

The Creole laughed harshly, contemptuously, his black eyes snapping with passion. "For 'Colonel Moreau'? I dare you—look me in the face and say that man is Colonel Moreau," waving a trembling hand to the window.

"I shall tell you nothing," replied Aaron sternly. "No matter what I suspect, I don't know. And I won't let a man be killed until I do know."

"When you met this man you did not know him," said Anatole, with slow significance. "I think to myself—who can he be? I make a guess and another guess and another guess, but I am not sure."

"Exactly," commented Mr. Randall, with some sharpness. "There you are. You are not sure. Neither am I. There is nothing to do but to await Tom Randall's arrival or, failing that, some authority from him, instructing us how to act; otherwise our honor blinds us, and we must meet this difficult matter with such patience and fortitude as we may possess. At the same time I thoroughly understand your feelings, and you have my entire sympathy. Let us pray this unbearable suspense will soon be terminated, for I make a poor and unwilling conspirator."

Meanwhile, at the card table, Messrs. Kirby and Bunce had been acting, for the benefit of the audience, a farce comedy bordering on the burlesque. Two seasoned gamblers, men who knew every game and trick embraced in cards and to whom the pasteboards were as familiar as one's knife and fork, it was somewhat difficult to simulate that chronic state of ignorance for which their self relegated position in society should attest.

Moreover, Kirby's native histrionic ability was badly handicapped by his thoughts being solely centered upon the now absent Adele, while the worthy Bunce's natural clumsiness was greatly enhanced by anxiety over their mutual embarrassment at finding himself a unit of such society. Happily for them their partners were not of a suspicious or inquiring turn of mind and were entirely engrossed with the game.

"You gentlemen know the cards a little?" Mme. Davezac had ventured, with a charming and guileless smile in their ignorance. "Well, we shall teach you something new of the game, maybe."

"I'll be glad to learn something new about it," Kirby replied, with gravity and perfect truth.

Mme. Davezac, with sadly amateurish fingers, assisted with many a flourish, intended to impress the presumable tyros with a fitting admiration for her skill, proceeded to cut the deck, while Bunce eyed her gloomily and mentally criticized what he termed a "dirty raffle." His professional dignity was outraged by the fact that she had cut to the last card and then solemnly reshuffled the deck, and, forgetting himself, he was about to assert his rights and demand a new shuffle when a warning kick from Kirby checked him.

"Ah, 'tis your deal," Mme. Davezac at length exclaimed, tendering the cards to Bunce. "First you must make the cards well-mix them, so-like you saw me. See, you saw, as they call it. You think you can do that?"

"Yes'm, I reckon I can git that fur," he ventured modestly. Taking the deck, he promptly forgot his role and proceeded to give a very fine demonstration of the professional shuffle, spreading the cards in the air between his hands until he resembled an expert bartender mixing drinks. This completed to his entire satisfaction, he spat out the pasteboards in a deal of lightning-like rapidity, while Mme. Davezac and the old judge sat bolt upright with astonishment. At length an extra desperate and well executed kick from Kirby checked the old gambler's stirring exhibition, and, covered with confusion, he dropped several cards to the floor and, in order to hide his flaming cheeks, stooped and began to miserably grope for them.

"You see," exclaimed Kirby, "my secretary is not so experienced as he might be. To speak confidentially, I would have let him go last month if it weren't that he is the only support of a wife and eleven children."

"I wish I was in the lower regions," growled Bunce sotto voce.

"I'll see that you get your wish if you don't sit up here," replied Kirby.

But soon it was Kirby's turn to gaze that state of absent-mindedness for which he had censured his partner, for in the adjoining room Adele had commenced to sing, and all his thoughts promptly went out to her, his lips mutely repeating the words of the well remembered song, while his eyes grew as dreamy and abstracted as his mind. At length, when it was his turn to play, conscious only that he was holding a book of cards and consequently inferring that he must be indulging in his head and butter game of poker, he spread his hand face up upon the table.

"Malheur!" exclaimed Mme. Davezac, agast at this startling innovation. "He exposes his hand."

"I fear," commented the judge, rising and pushing back his chair, "that Colonel Moreau finds it difficult to play cards and listen to the voice of a beautiful woman at the same time."

"And you cannot say that he have not good taste," commented Mme. Davezac. "Tiens! We adjourn, then, to the music room. You will come, Colonel Moreau and monsieur le secretar?"

Adele was still singing, Miss Pleydell accompanying her, and, drawn by the soft harmony, M. Veaudry and Aaron at length forsook the balcony and, as had the others, proceeded to make their way toward the music room. Their goal, however, was never attained, for as they stepped through the window into the deserted drawing room they were met by Poullette, one of the "French niggers." She carried a small bundle made of a knotted spotted handkerchief, and her manner attested that she was evidently laboring under the repressed excitement incident upon discovering business not intended for her cognizance. In fact, she had but completed a victory over old Croup, who had persistently annoyed her with his attentions and, when censured for so doing by his ample wife, had promptly and quite untruthfully charged Poullette with making his life unbearable by her unrequited affection for his person. Since then Poullette, snarling under the calumny, had eagerly sought some method of assuaging her outraged feelings, and now at last she had secured it.

"Miche Aaron," she whispered, plucking Mr. Randall's sleeve as he was about to pass on—"Miche Aaron, dat black man, Croup, he have a secret. Dat secret it is with Miche Moreau."

"What secret?" demanded Aaron, for at the magic name "Moreau" his companion and he were instantly all attention. "What secret?" he again peremptorily demanded.

"I see them speak together sly," said Poullette, nodding her head and screwing up her eyes in a manner that bodied ill for the amative and untruthful Mr. Croup. "I can tell that they did not wish you to see. Then when you come from dinner Colonel Moreau he hand this to Croup behind the door, Croup he keep it in be breast pocket until he fall asleep on porch just now. I have look. It is all those camels."

"Camels?" dryly echoed Aaron, with raised eyebrows.

"Oui, miche," confidently nodded Poullette, evidently no whit amazed at the idea of the spotted handkerchief being able to accommodate such animals. "All those camels the colonel gen'man wear when he is come, wear them on his fob chain." And she opened the spotted handkerchief.

MAKES BUTTER IN 8 MINUTES

8 SIZES OF GLASS AND METAL

The DAZEY cannot be compared with any other churn on the market because there is such an immense difference. The DAZEY is not an imitation; it is an entirely new departure in churn making; it is better. Just think of the difference between this churn and the old style dash, or wooden churns that take at least one-half hour to churn, sometimes two hours. Surely your time is worth 15c per hour. At this rate the DAZEY would save you $10.50 every year or many times its cost.

THE DAZEY IS AS EASILY CLEANED AS A TIN PAIL. Because the receptacle which holds the cream is removable from the casing, and as there are no rough or uneven surfaces or bearings inside.

DAZEY METAL CHURN
ARE MORE SANITARY THAN WOOD

The DAZEY Makes More Butter Than Any Other Churn Out of the Same Amount of Cream. This can be easily proved by putting one-half of your cream in each churn and then weighing the butter; the scales will show the facts.

The DAZEY receptacle cannot absorb a particle of butter fat or moisture and therefore will never become rancid.

There is nothing about the DAZEY to wear out. There are no complicated parts; very simple, easy to use and will last for years.

Recital

Mrs. Wagner, of Belleville, will present a party of high-class Entertainers in

The Empire Theatre Thursday, Oct. 30th

This Troupe has been playing in leading Ontario cities and on Saturday will appear before H. R. H. The Prince of Wales at Kingston.

The Cast Includes:

MISS DOROTHY BELL
Harpist

MISS CHARLOTTE BERGH
Coloratura Soprano

Miss Dorothy Bell, who handles the harp with as much grace, ease and thorough understanding as her gifted mother does the organ, won the hearts of all, her irresistible personality appealing to everyone.

Mrs. Bell (Ind.) Morning Star. Dorothy Bell, who appears at the Empire Theatre on Oct. 30th, is a young harpist of ability, with experience on the concert stage. She has travelled extensively through the middle western states in Lyceum, Oratorio, and Concert work, and was, during the winter of 1917 and 1918 manager of the Great Trio, which was coached by the composer, Arthur Nevins, and was sent out by the Kansas University Extension Department. She has proven to be a great favorite in the army cantonments where she has done much playing, having in one week given twenty-two concerts for our soldiers.

Miss Bell comes from a very musical family, having received all of her early musical education from her mother, a very talented pianist and pipe-organist, since taking up the study of the harp, she has had the advantage of working under several excellent teachers, among them Mr. Pasquale Montani, of Indianapolis, and Mr. M. A. Russo, harpist with the Kansas City Symphony Orchestra. Her theory work was done at the Fine Arts School of Kansas University, under Charles Sanford Skilton, the noted composer and theorist.

MISS HAZEL DELL NEFF
Coloratura Soprano

Miss Hazel Dell Neff marked herself as a soprano of unusual talent and ability. Her vocalization, and tone production were excellent and her pianissimo work was especially demonstrated in magnificent Polish, "I Am Titania" from "Mignon", which she rendered in a finished manner. This was received enthusiastically by the audience.

MR. KINGMAN
Baritone

Mr. Kingman has a baritone voice of good quality and plenty of dramatic expression as well as a pleasing presence. He was well received and won merited applause.

HEARST WAS DEFEATED

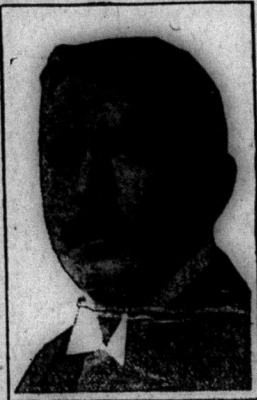

No Party Strong Enough to Form Government.

United Farmers Will Have the Largest Representation in the Ontario Legislature, With Liberals and Conservatives About Even—Labor Made Gains in Cities—Many Surprises in Provincial Elections.

TORONTO, Oct. 21. — In one of the most remarkable elections Ontario has ever experienced the Hearst Government went down to defeat on Monday, Sir William Hearst and all but one member of those of his Cabinet who were not elected by acclamation went under in the landslide, and of the strong following of 70 members who sat behind the Prime Minister in the last Legislature only 26 members remain. The defeat of the Conservatives was due almost entirely to the tremendous vote rolled up by the United Farmers' candidates and by the Labor men. The Liberals, despite their win of five seats in "Tory Toronto," stand in the new Legislature practically as they were in the last House. In fact, when all the returns are in Hartley Dewar, K.C., the Liberal leader, will probably have a smaller following than did Wm. Proudfoot, the former leader.

The largest single party in the new House will be that of the farmers who, by an alliance with either of the older parties and the Labor members can command a large working majority. Just what will be the next Government of Ontario it is impossible to foresee at the present time. Even Sir William Hearst, in his statement to the press at Sault Ste. Marie, was evidently unable to figure out the situation. It is doubtful if that point will be settled until the new Legislature meets. As the matter stands the Government of Sir William Hearst will remain in power until the House meets.

If in the intervening time the Prime Minister has not succeeded in reaching a working agreement with any other party in the House, he will, of course, tender his resignation to the Lieutenant-Governor, who will then have to turn to either Hartley Dewar or to the United Farmer representation. But neither the Liberal nor the Farmers can form a Government, standing alone, and which ever is called upon to lead must form a union cabinet or give up the task. In the event of the farmers declining to join forces with either party, a new election would almost certainly be necessary to clear the situation.

It is possible, of course, that the Prime Minister might choose to tender his resignation before the House is called together, but it is quite possible that he will carry on until the House can pass upon the question of leadership.

Whatever may be the outcome, it is almost certain that Ontario's next Government will be a fusion of some sort, either one of Conservatives, Farmers and Labor, or Liberals, Farmers and Labor. In view of their working alliance during the election, it is taken for granted that they will stand together in the House.

The tremendous sweep of the Farmers and Labor men astonished everyone. The showing of the Independent Labor party being perhaps the most spectacular. It was conceded that the Farmers would gain twenty-five seats, but the most that close observers of the campaign were willing to grant the Labor forces was two or three seats. As it turned out the Labor men won practically every seat in which they had a good candidate and anything like an organization.

The defeat of Sir William Hearst in Sault Ste. Marie was an outstanding instance of the manner in which the workings of the province have become aroused. Cunningham, the Soo Labor candidate, was not regarded as a serious contender, and the only question in the election was thought to be the size of Sir William's vote. Yet Cunningham rolled up a majority of over 1,500. Even more inexplicable was the defeat of Sir Adam Beck in London. The Prime Minister's failure to hold his seat can be explained by the general sentiment running against the Government, but Sir Adam had separated himself from the Government, and was running as an independent. It is possible that he lost the votes of many former Conservative supporters who did not like his action in breaking away from the Conservative Government, but that would not explain the tremendous shift that brought him defeat.

Sir Adam will feel his reverse keenly, and if he carries out the threat made during the campaign, that defeat would be interpreted as a repudiation of his work for the Hydro, he would retire from the Hydro-Electric Commission. It is possible, however, that whatever Government is formed will endeavor to retain the Hydro chairman at his post.

Although a Few of the Cities Went "Wet," the Vote on the Whole Showed a Large Majority in Favor of the O. T. A.—Rural Districts Overwhelmed Those Who Voted "Yes."

TORONTO, Oct. 21.—The result of the vote on the four questions of the referendum shows that the Canada Temperance Act is sustained by a majority of two or three to one, a few cities and towns, notably Hamilton, Toronto, Kitchener, Ottawa, Waterloo and Windsor voted for repeal, but all the rural municipalities rolled up big majorities for a dry Ontario.

Late Monday night Rev. Ben. H. Spence, of the Ontario Referendum

HON. A. E. ROSS.

Committee, issued the following statement: "The victory seems to be a substantial one. It looks now as if we would have a majority of six figures on every question, which is a magnificent vindication of the Ontario Temperance Act, and a mandate to the Government of the Province to improve and enforce that law to the limit of their power. So far as the Referendum Committee is concerned, it was a good, straight, clean fight. We sought to facilitate in every way the expression of the opinion of the electors and they have spoken."

"There is a lesson in the returns for Ottawa that they can't go too far or too fast in regard to prohibitory legislation to suit the Province of Ontario. It shows the utter folly of the proposition now being put forward there to bring on another vote in this or, indeed, any province in the Dominion."

"The Ontario Legislature, now backed up by the electors, have gone as far in the direction of prohibition of the beverage drink traffic as the constitutional powers of the province will permit. The Dominion Government should go as far as its legislative power."

"The organized temperance forces of Canada will not be satisfied with anything less than the enactment of a Dominion law supplementing the provincial legislation now in force in eight out of the nine provinces, which will prohibit the manufacture in, the importation into, the exportation from and the inter-provincial shipment within the Dominion of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes. That, and that only, will solve the temperance problem, and we are out to solve it. The battle is over. We have won. The war is still on."

Arctic Explorers Reach Seattle.

SEATTLE, Wash., Oct. 21.—A. G. Gunner, a Martin Kilian, the last members of the Vilhjálmur Stefansson's Canadian Arctic expedition to return from the Arctic, arrived here Monday from Nome, Alaska, on their way to Victoria, B. C., the port from which Stefansson sailed six years ago. Gunner and Kilian joined Stefansson's expedition in the north and were with Storke, Storkerson, Stefansson's Lieutenant, when he drifted eight months on an ice floe in an unsuccessful attempt to find a current across the Arctic from Alaska to Siberia.

died Wednesday October 30th 1919.
One year has passed since that sad day.

God called the one we loved away
Forget her, no, we never will.
As years roll on we will love her still.

Epworth League Convention

The Annual Convention of the Madoc District Epworth League was held in the Methodist Church Madoc on Thursday, October 23rd. In the absence of the President of the district,
Rev. A. C. Hie was in the chair.

The meeting opened with an address of greeting by the President of the Madoc League, Miss Margaret
Kerr. The reply was made by Rev. Weber, of Actinolite. In the absence of Mrs. A. B. Frederick, Mr.
Hie then gave a splendid address on
"Why I Desire a League on my Circuit".
The speaker of both sessions was Rev. R. A. Whattam who gave a splendid address at both sessions.

Mrs. (Rev.) John Trunpaur gave an interesting and educative address on "This and that in the Epworth League". The solo by Miss O'Hara was much enjoyed by all.
The evening session was well attended.
Rev. A. L. Brown also gave an address on "The Challenge of the Present Crisis" which was splendid.
This was followed by Rev. Fred Maines, B.A., B.D., a returned soldier, on "Doing our bit in the present Crisis". His address was particularly interesting as he spoke of our boys in the trenches of France and Belgium, of the spirit and courage which helped so much to win the war. Rev. Whattam then gave his address for the evening.

The reports from the different Leagues were very encouraging.
Particular attention should be drawn to that of Ivanhoe League.
Supper was served in the assembly for everyone. The proceeds to be divided between the Ladies' Aid and the Epworth League to be devoted towards the Forward Movement.

Deanery Meeting of Hastings County

The Deanery meeting of Hastings County was held in Madoc on Tuesday October 28th, in St. John's Church. Six visiting clergy were present—Rural Dean Swayne of Belleville, who said Evenson; Rev.
A. E. Smart, of Tweed; Rev. H. Pet-tem, of Bancroft; Capt. Rev. J. Davies, of Roslin (a returned Chaplain);
Rev. A. Geen, of Belleville.

The sermon was preached by Rev.
Canon Bedford Jones, M.A., of Brockville, President (elect) Bishop College, Lennoxville. The text was "For unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall be much required." The text however, was principally a leading up to his subject "The Forward Movement." He spoke eloquently and feelingly on the work done by Canada on its people during the war. The idea of the forward movement is to keep these characteristics awake, to turn them to the forwarding of the churches' ideals and principals throughout the whole world. The Methodists, he said, and Presbyterians Baptists and other denominations were all working for this same end in the manner most suitable for their church. The appeal being made at present, he said in conclusion, was not for money to carry on the Forward Movement but rather that the church members would spread abroad the subject read it and understand it, then when the time came to make an appeal for money it would be responded to naturally and enthusiastically because one and all would understand and appreciate its ideals.

Communication

Madoc, October 28th, 1919.

To the Editor of The Review:
DEAR SIR,—Some people in Madoc think that I have been reporting defective wiring to the electrical inspector, and I wish in this letter to show these people that their opinion is wrong. The Ontario Government has made some laws concerning electric wiring and one of these states that every person doing electric wiring must take out a permit on each job he does. This, of course, means that the inspector has to visit each premise where a contractor does a job. In some cases the inspector will ask the contractor to show him around the premises for the purpose of locating any defects in the old wiring, but in no case where I have done wiring have I pointed out defects to the inspector, but have left him to hunt them himself.

I challenge the public to name an instance where I have called an inspector's attention to any wiring in the last five years other than that which I was installing. Unless any person can prove an instance where I have reported old wiring to an inspector I must ask the public to cease from inferring that I have been making any such reports.

INDEPENDENT ARABIA

British Aided King of the Hedjaz in His Struggle.

It is probable that many years will pass before the justice has been done by the Arab to the Arab. The of the great war, the struggle and some of the world-wide, and some of the minor campaigns waged with great heroism and yielding to temporary obscurity but possibly ultimate major importance in world history have been enacted. Yet known to the vast majority of the millions of people who believed they were watching closely the whole of the war's activities.

For instance, how many of those who believed themselves to have been students of the war and who hung maps all over their library walls can tell us that in of importance about the struggle of the Arabs to free themselves from Turkish control?
Who knows of the siege of Medina or of the efforts to sever the Turkish line of communications between Damascus and the former?

Yet out of this campaign may come an independent world state just as out of the Russian efforts in Armenia and the British efforts in Palestine, may come new small nations.

To Great Britain, which has played so large a part in bringing this about, the chief advantage in the years to come would then be the row of buffer states between European influence and India. There was a time when British statesmanship looked upon Turkey as such a buffer state. But the Turks turned to other friends and what was once a protection to India became, in late years, a menace with the approach of German influence.

But to the world at large the chief interest would be found in the recreation of an independent nation that at one time played a proud and historic part in the world. The home of Mohammedanism and, before the trans-ference of the seat of the Mohammedan power from Damascus to Bagdad, its leader, Arabia, gradually lost its influence and importance and became split up into a number of independent principalities. In 1570 the tribes of Yaman and Hedjaz acknowledged the suzerainty of the Turkish Sultan. After 60 years, however, they regained their independence, and it was not until 1871 that the last of the Yaman rulers was again overthrown.

It was the King of the Hedjaz, senior descendant of Mohammed, who, in the present war, decided the future destiny of the Arab by

Dr. Chase's Ointment

Dr. Chase's Ointment

throwing in his lot with the British and with British officers in his army, waged successful war against the Turks. There was a time at the start of the war when he held aloof, but after the fall of Kut and the surrender of Gen. Townshend and his little force in Mesopotamia he offered his aid to the hard-pressed British.

The new state, if it is to include the whole of Arabia, will have a population of between 4,000,000 and 5,000,000 and an area of 1,500,000 square miles. It is unimportant in the matter of trade production, but is of extreme importance in a political sense.

The Modern Influenza.

That the new influenza is a distinct malady and not the old influenza is the belief of Dr. Leonard Keene Hirschberg. Writing in Munsey's he says:

"The present plague is probably the most malignant pandemic that the world has experienced since medieval times, when Boreas's lacies and gentlemen had to run away from France to escape an onrush of the bubonic plague. In one of our army cantonnements I saw more cases of pneumonia at one time than have entered the Johns Hopkins Hospital in the thirty-year of its foundation."

"In civil, as in military, life pneumonia was far and away the most frequent complication; and this led to the revival of the old name of 'black plague' for the new disease, the bodies of many of its victims being cyanotic, or purplish-black in color, at the approach of death."

"Another similarity between Spanish influenza and the bubonic plague was the number of rats and other rodents found dead. One day last October I noticed, and reported to the Public Health Service, three dead rats lying within a few inches of three of the most prominent streets in Baltimore. Rats and their fleas seem to be the spreaders of contagion in several epidemic diseases."

Siam's New Flag.

Siam has a new flag. To commemorate the entry of his country into the war against Germany, King Maha Vajiravudh decided to modify the flag by adding blue to it, in order that it might be a tricolor like the flags of the other allies.

"This addition," says the royal decree, "will serve as a token of equality and honesty between Siam and her allies, for it is a sign of the alliance of the world against barbarism. Besides the color blue recalls the birthday of his majesty and is used especially for him. It seems good to him to make it figure in the national flag."

By the terms of this decree the new flag has five horizontal stripes —red, white, blue, white, red. The width of the blue stripe is threesevenths of the total breadth, and that of each of the red and white stripes is one-seventh. The new flag is called the "Thong Trai Rong," and is flown upon all merchant vessels and ashore in Siamese territory. Vessels in the Government service fly the same flag, but with an anchor, a wheel and a crown, in yellow, in the middle. Those of the royal Siamese navy carry in the middle a red disc on which is a white elephant.

Eating Moss.

In Sweden, where a shortage of foodstuffs has been very seriously felt during the war, a flour substitute recently has been developed. On rocks, in pine forests especially, a moss grows, known as Iceland moss, which has, after considerable experimenting, proved to be an excellent and nutritious food substitute.

MORRISON OF CHINA PAYS VISIT TO CANADA.

Brilliant Man Was Born In Australia and After Many Adventures He Is Now an Adviser of the Government of China — He Tells Some Facts About Conditions In the Oriental Republic.

"MORRISON OF China," one
of the advisers to the Chinese Government
since the establishment of the republic, eight years ago, is one of the most romantic figures who have visited Canada for some time.
His full name is George Ernest Morrison, and he used to be Chinese correspondent of the London Times.

Long before that, however, his adventures began. He was born in Australia, and as a young man, walked three thousand miles across that continent. At a later date, he walked almost a similar distance across China. He has commanded an exploring expedition to New Guinea, where two native spears pierced his body. He took a medical degree at Edinburgh, where, among other incidents, these spear-heads were removed. He took a post-graduate course in Paris under Charcot; acted as court physician to the Sheriff of Wazan in Morocco; served as assistant purser on a ship in the West Indian fruit trade, and sailed as a seaman before the mast in the South Sea to study the Kanaka question.

He represented the London Times at the Portsmouth Peace Conference between Russia and Japan in 1905.

He recently passed through Canada on his way to the Peace Conference at Versailles, where he will act as adviser or counsel to the Chinese representatives who crossed this continent on their way to Europe a few weeks ago. The delegation is headed by Lu Tseng-Tsing.

One of the questions which is sure to be discussed at the conference is the status of Kiao-Chau, which, taken from Germany in 1914, has been held by the Japanese. It was absolutely agreed at the time that Kiao-Chau was eventually to be restored to China, but no time limit was fixed.
Dr. Morrison anticipates no trouble on this point. He feels that Japan will carry out her pledge.

Dr. Morrison was asked while in the Dominion about the "advice" or "complaints" which the Allied Governments presented to China last autumn, enumerating details in which China was alleged not to be co-operating fully with the Allies.
Among the principal grounds of complaint was the failure to intern Germans. China's reply to this, as well as to most of the other points, was that, if she were remiss, it was not a voluntary failure, but one caused by the internal anarchy in the country. Real efforts to carry out arrangements were being made.

"What about the complaint that China refused to retire the Government-General of Heino for supporting the enemy and the Bolsheviks in spite of the protests of the Allies?"
was also asked.

Dr. Morrison said that certain Chinese troops, in the north, had co-operated in some way with the Bolsheviki, but they had done so in ignorance of the situation. When the facts became known, the support ceased.

Dr. Morrison, however, is not pessimistic about the future. He thinks that the Japanese Government now is genuinely anxious to recover and maintain the friendship of the Chinese people, and that some readjustment will be effected.

Dr. Morrison described the President of China, Hsu-Shih-Chang, as quite an elderly man who has had much political experience. Not only did he hold numerous administrative posts, but he had been viceroy of Manchuria.

Dr. Morrison was in Pekin in July, 1917, when the two weeks' restoration of the Manchu emperor occurred.
It was brought about, according to Dr. Morrison, without the Emperor's knowledge, and was the idea of a single general, Chang Hsin, Pekia, for a few days, was a lively place.
A "characteristic" Chinese battle took place, in which a great deal of street fighting took place and a vast quantity of ammunition was fired.
The results, however, were not satisfying. Only a few score of people were shot, and most of these were civilians who met their death accidentally. The reason for the small number of casualties is that although there was a prodigious amount of firing, the soldiers showed no understanding of the trajectory of a bullet, and their aim was hopelessly wild. By the middle of July the whole affair was over, and the republic was running again.

Political conditions in China, however, are by no means normal. At the present moment, there are two rival Parliaments, one, officially recognized, at Pekin, in the North, and the other at Canton in the South. Both Parliaments are bi-cameral. A. though the Southern organization is not recognized, delegates from it are being attached to the official Chinese Mission, so that all shades of opinion may be represented.

Asked as to the franchise in the Chinese Republic, Dr. Morrison said it was generally regarded as being fairly liberal, considering the political development of the country.
Manual laborers, however, didn't get a vote. Dr. Morrison thought this disability was on account of their illiteracy, rather than their occupation.

A Minimum Wage.

The Manitoba Minimum Wage Board has set its first wage for working women in the province in the case of laundry workers. The board has feared that $9.48 a week is necessary for a girl to live decently, and for good measure an additional two cents a week is added.

The DAZEY churn has been sold with but other churns on the market because there is such an increasing demand for it. The DAZEY is not an imitation it is an entirely new departure in churn making; it is better.
Just think of the difference between this churn and the old style dash or wooden churn that takes at least one-half hour to churn, sometimes two hours.
Surely your time is worth $5 per hour. At this rate the DAZEY would save you $11.50 every year or many times its cost.
THE DAZEY IS AN EASILY CLEANED AS A TERN PAIL. Because the receptacle which holds the cream is removable from the gearing, and as there are no rough or uneven surfaces or bristles inside.

DAZEY METAL CHURNS
ARE THE BEST SANITARY THING WOODEN CHURNS CAN BE.
The DAZEY Makes More Butter Than Any Other Churn Out of the Same Amount of Cream.
This can be easily proven by putting half a pint of your cream in each churn and then weighing the butter the scales will show the facts.
The DAZEY receptacle cannot absorb a particle of butter fat or moisture and therefore will never become rancid.
There is nothing about the DAZEY to west out.
There are no complicated parts very simple, easy to use and will last for years.

Victory Loan Campaign Opened Monday

All over Canada the last Victory Loan Campaign began on Monday. $300,000,000 is the amount of the issue but this amount must be over subscribed if Canada is to meet all her obligations.

The campaign in Madoc opened with a public meeting in the Empire Theatre. Mr. Fraser Aylesworth, C. E., canvasser for 1917 and 1918 Victory Loans spoke on the reasons and objects of this last loan. Industrial and Agricultural prosperity depended upon its success.

If industrial stagnation were to overtake Bolshevism and I. W. W. propaganda would become powerful and the existing social fabric would be swept aside.

Rev. Wm. Higgs compared the Canadian Government to a vast clearing house. The nations of the world were unable to pay cash but their credit was good. The Canadian farmer and manufacturers were unable to extend credit to those countries therefore in order to secure these orders for Canada and retain our prosperity the Government was compelled to borrow from Canadian people to pay cash to the Canadian people for the goods sold to Europe on credit.

Mr. R. R. Casement dealt with the investment properties of the Loan. He saw no need for these patriotic appeals to buy, the investment was in itself the best the world has to offer. The security is all of Canada. All Canadian lands, banks, business etc., are the security behind the Loan. The interest is 5 1/2 per cent almost double that of the bank. Besides past Loans were selling above par. Buying Victory Bonds did not tie up a business man as any bank will accept them as first class securities.

In addition to the speeches, Mrs. and Miss Grant and Mr. Clarke, of Belleville rendered several vocal selections which were heartily enjoyed.

In these peace days, when the danger of shot and shell has passed, people are noting with much sympathy the fate of some of our war heroes. It has recently been brought to our notice that of Capt. Albert W. Northover, V.C., M.C., who distinguished himself at Giverny, and went through all the decisive battles on the Western front in 1915 and 1916, until he was incapacitated from further trench warfare by severe shell shock, and since that time had been employed by the War Office in England. On September 23, 1919, Capt. Northover was injured in an automobile accident, to which injuries he succumbed on September 25. He was shortly expected to return to Canada to resume his duties as a civil engineer. He leaves a widow and two small sons, who are residents in Toronto. Capt. Northover's widow (nee Miss G. L. Grange) is a niece of Dr. G. F. Wright, formerly of Madoc.

BORN

HOUSTON. — At Tweed, on Monday, October 6th, 1919, to Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Houston, a daughter, Margaret Venard.

Eldorado

Mrs. George Sandford has returned home after a long visit with friends in Prince Edward.

Mrs. George White has returned home after a week's visit with friends in Belleville.

A large number from Bannockburn visited the town hall at Eldorado yesterday in a good cause. Mr. Frank Chambers was in the number. Glad to see Frank there if he only polled his vote right.

Mr. Dick Warren and his aunt, Mrs. Nelson, were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Warren, Bannockburn, also Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Cleveland and son were also Sunday guests of Mr. Warren's.

Miss Lora Shaw is visiting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Reid.

Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Morrison were at the Hall yesterday.

We are glad to see Mr. and Mrs. H. Jones in town again. Harry looks as if they had used him well.

We are very sorry to hear of Mrs. John Holmes being on the sick list again. We hope for a speedy recovery.

Miss Martha Holmes has just returned home from a visit to her brother, Mr. J. Holmes, of Anson.

We are very sorry to hear that Mr. Fitchett is not well.

We were glad to see Mrs. Wm. Fox able to be out again. She was at the Town Hall for the good cause. Also Mrs. Tom Fox was able to go that far that day too. If there was a good cause every day they might be better sooner.

We are sorry to hear of Mrs. C. White is very ill. Her daughter, Miss Annie White, of Belleville, is home taking care of her mother.

Mr. Ed. Fix has returned home from Oshawa.

The tale mine is doing great work. They are erecting new buildings, houses and another new mill for grinding the blue tale.

Bannockburn

Mr. Sandy Andrews returned home after spending a few days in Toronto why didn't you bring her back with you.

Mr. James Freeburn, of Flinton was in this burg one day last week. Mrs. James Hunter returned on Thursday after spending a few days in Queensboro.

Mrs. J. Anderson, of Queensboro returned home after spending a few weeks with relatives here.

Who's the guy that is so fond of climbing on the roofs of houses, be careful you do not fall down the chimney next time.

Mr. James MacLeod, and Mr. Harve MacLeod arrived in this burg on Wednesday.

Mrs. C. B. Simmons and Mrs. A. Hunter spent a day in Tweed one day last week.

Miss Grace Andrew spent Sunday at Mrs. J. Bateman's, of Kellar's Bridge.

Mr. Dave Johnston, of Cooper, spent Sunday here.

Mr. and Mrs. MacLeod took tea at their daughters Mrs. H. C. Lloyd.

Mr. R. Dales car took a trip to Madoc garage on Saturday.

Mr. Murney Wannamaker bought a horse from Mr. W. Sandford and traded with Mr. Robins, of Stoney Settlement.

Mr. Ben Warren spent Saturday in Madoc.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Johnston were in this burg one day last week.

Miss Jessie McEwen returned to Toronto after spending a brief visit at her home here.

Miss Alice Harris, of Belleville, spent Sunday at her home here.

Victory Loan Progress

All doubts as to the success of the Victory Loan 1919 have been dispelled in the opening days of the campaign. Hastings County having subscribed altogether $121,150. In the first two days while on the same days last year only $14,000, came in. Reports from all over Canada indicate greater success than workers had dared to hope for. It is believed now that the lack of enthusiasm, which rather dampened some people's outlook, means nothing. People have been quietly getting ready to subscribe and the fact that there is more money in the banks on deposit than before any former Loan is a fact well known.

Among the different canvassing districts throughout Hastings teams are working up an interesting competition for the first Prince of Wales flag, awarded to districts attaining their objective. For the first and second the race was led by Messrs. Norman Laing and Arthur Yates, two returned officers who are canvassing Deloro. The brought in $244 per cent of their objective. This amounted to $5,950.

Running then a close second race were these two energetic young Belleville men, Messrs. J. F. Hinchey and G. N. Spafford, canvassers for Tyndinago Township, with a percentage of 19.33 amounting to $14,500. Mr. Hinchey on Tuesday secured a splendid subscription of $7,500, from Mr. J. Pitt of Shannonville, who now holds $12,000. In Victory Bonds and is the largest individual Victory Loan investor in Tyndinago.

Work in rural sections was somewhat hampered at the beginning of the week by the bad condition of the roads but this only adds to the success. Daily returns are to be shown throughout the County at all centres so everyone will have a chance to see how their districts are getting along.

A tribute to the absolute security of Victory Bonds is the number of public institutions who are entrusting their funds in this Loan. The Marmora and Deloro branch of the G. W. V. A., in addition to the Belleville branch, have subscribed $200. of their funds. St. Paul's Church Marmora, has put $200. in the Loan.

The R-38 the largest British airship has been sold to the American Government for $2,500,000.

Wedding Bells

A very quiet but pretty wedding was solemnized at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Thompson, Big Island, of their daughter, Mary Evelyn, to George Dowsley Galway, son of Mr. George H. Galway, of Gananoque. Music suitable to the occasion was rendered by Miss Mabel Vanhorn, while the bride and groom took their places under an arch of evergreen. The ceremony was performed by Rev. E. J. Wilson, of Ottawa, in the presence of a few of the intimate friends. After the congratulations the bridal party proceeded to the dining-room where a dainty repast was served, after which Mr. and Mrs. Galway motored to Belleville and took the afternoon train for Toronto, the bride wearing a navy gabardine suit with hat to match also the groom's gift a beautiful marabout cape. On their return they will reside near Gananoque where the groom is a farmer. Their host of friends join in wishing them a long and happy wedded life.

Farmers Win Three

In the five Federal by-elections yesterday three Farmer candidates were elected, one Liberal and one Unionist.

In Carleton-Victoria, the seat formerly held by Hon. Frank Carvell, now Chairman of the Dominion Railway Commission, the Farmer candidate had a majority of about 3,600.

In Glengarry-Stormont the Farmers' nominee led his Unionist opponent by over 1,000. Glengarry-Stormont was formally held by John Martin, Liberal.

In Assiniboia, the seat made vacant by the elevation of J. G. Turritt Unionist-Liberal, to the Senate, the Farmer candidate beat Hon. W. R. Motherwell so badly that the latter lost his deposit.

As has been expected, Ernest Lapointe, Liberal had a big majority over his Independent Liberal opponent in Quebec East, the seat formerly held by Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Dr. S. F. Tolmie, the new Minister of Agriculture, won Victoria over a Labor candidate by about 2,000. The bye election in North Ontario was deferred because of the death of the Unionist candidate.

HOME NEWS

The heavy wind on Tuesday blew in the south window of Mr. J. Bargman's house.

The Victory Loan is away to a good start. People have apparently been waiting for this opportunity. One man wished to make out an application to the bill poster when he was distributing Victory Loan literature.

The regular meeting of the G. W. V. was held on Tuesday evening in the town hall. There was an attendance of about 40. It was decided that a ladies' auxiliary be formed and an organization meeting held on Monday evening, November 3rd.

A Good Woman Cook wanted, wages $30 per month and board. Apply to the house, Tweed, W. O'Keefe, Prop.

A very sad accident happened in Madoc this week when Mr. S. J. Danford was thrown from a wagon. He was hauling a load of crushed stone when his horse became startled and sprang forward. Mr. Danford was badly injured having three ribs and his shoulder broken. He is still in a very precarious condition.

The young son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Hallstone suffered a severe accident recently, while playing on the balcony at the rear of his home he fell through the railing fifteen feet to the ground below. Among his injuries are a broken leg and several cuts and bruises. He is however doing well and his condition is satisfactory.

Mr. David Nalon spent a few days in Ganaroque this week.

The hunters are getting ready for the season's deer hunt.

Mrs. Parker Embury is spending a week in Toronto with friends.

The big financial interests are this year doubling their loan subscriptions.

Stirling held a public reception to returned soldiers and presented each with $25.

Cushion Tops of Moira Lake, $2.25 at the Review Office.

First five Victory Loan subscriptions received at Headquarters to total 25 millions.

Considerable electrical wiring in Madoc has been condemned and several properties are being re-wired.

Mrs. C. Harris is leaving this week for Michigan, where she will spend the winter with relatives.

Miss Volena Reavie, of Roslin, has returned to Madoc to continue her studies at the High School.

Mr. Kinnear Cross, of the Bank of Commerce, Belleville, spent over Sunday in town with his mother.

Ladies! Ladies! Permit us to speak a word of the Empress Shoe for women. This shoe has many warm friends in this vicinity who have worn or are wearing them. This shoe or boot is bench made and made to fit the foot, thereby giving perfect comfort to the wearer. It will pay you to buy this shoe of quality and appearance as we can assure you of satisfaction in every particular. If you wear one pair you will want another. The Ludbrook Shoe Store.

Griffith Talks of "The Great Love"

...Title of Picture Means Many Things. Referring to the title of his picture "The Great Love," David Griffith, the famous picture producer, said in a recent interview that it meant the love of country, then in it may mean the love of individuals," he said. "At any rate, I hope to show in this picture the remarkable transition of the butterfly life in the great cause of winning the war."

Mr. Griffith said when Queen Alexandra heard of his project, that of commemorating many of the historic war scenes in England in motion pictures, she was gracious enough to come to Lady Diana Manners' hospital and devote nearly an entire day in arranging the hospital scenes shown in the picture and appearing in them herself. This remarkable photograph has a deeply interesting love story with numerous war situations and tense dramatic moments. The story has been admirably handled and the players are of steller celebrity. It will be shown at the Masonic Hall Theatre on Tuesday November 4th.

"A Joan of Arc Machine"

"SHE withstood everything in the field and above all was, and still is, the last and only car to survive until the cessation of hostilities."—Extract from letter received by Ford Motor Company from a British Soldier, in Africa.

Over shell-torn roads, through water soaked fields, second only to the tanks in its power to climb debris and crater holes, the Ford car made a world famous record in the fighting area of the great war. In press despatches, in field reports, in letters, in rhyme and song the praises of the Ford were sounded.

In France - 700 cars out of 1,000 were Fords
In Italy - 850 cars out of 1,000 were Fords
In Egypt - 980 cars out of 1,000 were Fords
In Mesopotamia - 990 cars out of 1,000 were Fords

The Ford power plant that established this world-wide record in every theatre of the war remains the same. It will be in the Ford you buy.

Victory Loan Campaign

Don't be surprised if you are awakened in the dead of night by some one trying to get into your house, or if a hoarse voice whispers into your ear as you sit listening to a sermon at church. Possibly you may become conscious of some elusive personage haunting you day and night. It will not be the black hand craving your money or your life but simply the energetic Madoc workers of the Victory Loan 1919 trying to make you realize that the war is not over so far as expenses are concerned and also that you are a pinhead and chump for not taking advantage of a splendid investment opportunity.

Messrs. Kincaid, Thompson, Fox are the sleuths who are your trail. Realizing the urgent necessity for the success of this loan they are making special efforts this year to beat Madoc's last year's splendid record. They are optimistic for bank managers all over Hastings County have stated that their savings deposits are far greater than before former Loans, in some cases having increased threefold.

Last week a publicity and canvassers' conference was held in Belleville followed by a dinner at the Quinte Hotel at which the canvassers from Lennox and Addington and Prince Edward Counties also attended and everyone is bound that the County is going to beat its last year's record of nearly $2,700,000, hence the energetic local efforts.

A splendid County organization has been built up this year under Deacon, who locally launched the two former Victory Loan Campaigns. This year's organization is as follows:—

QUEEN ALEXANDRA FILM

Noble Women of England Shown in "The Great Love"

It is not often that a motion picture producer can call to his aid the services of a Queen and women of the most exclusive nobility of England. But David Wark Griffith, producer of the famous "Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance" and "Hearts of the World," has succeeded in accomplishing this in "The Great Love" his photoplay which will be shown at the Masonic Hall Theatre on Tuesday November 4th, Matinee and night with special Orchestra and effects.

In this photoplay, Queen Alexandra and many titled ladies are seen engaged at their various duties in hospitals and on their estates, some scrubbing, some mopping floors, others engaged in attending convalescent soldiers while others do menial work, but which they do not deem degrading, because it is necessary for them to do their bit in order that the cause of the world democracy may triumph. British Women are Patriotic Halt at no sacrifice as shown in "The Great Love." The noble sacrifices made by most distinguished women in the higher circles in England, are adequately shown in David Wark Griffith's remarkable photoplay, "The Great Love," which will be shown at the Masonic Hall theatre on November the 4th.

Since the beginning of the great war, England has sent the flower of its nobility to the front and untold thousands have laid down their lives upon the ensanguined battlefields of France and Belgium. At home the women and men have united in the great work of caring for the wounded and in prosecuting the relief activities so essential to the successful conduct of the war.

This is the awakening that is portrayed with startling fidelity in "The Great Love." Among those who for the first time appear in the photoplay are such well-known distinguished personages as Queen Alexandra, Lady Diana Manners, Countess Maserene, Elizabeth Asquith, Lady Lavery and others. In the cast of players are Lilian Gish, Robert Harcourt, Henry B. Walthall, George Fawcett, George Seigmann, Gloria Hope and others.

Victory Loan 1919

$300,000,000. 5½% Gold Bonds

Bearing interest from November 1st, 1919, and offered in two maturities, the choice of which is optional with the subscriber as follows:

5 year Bonds due November 1st, 1924

Principal payable without charge at the Office of the Minister of Finance and Receiver General at Ottawa, or at the Office of the Assistant Receiver General at Halifax, St. John, Charlottetown, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Regina, Calgary and Victoria.

Bonds may be registered as principal or as to principal and interest, as hereinafter provided, at any of the above-mentioned offices.

Interest payable, without charge, half-yearly, May 1st and November 1st, at any branch in Canada of any Chartered Bank.

Principal and Interest payable in Gold. Denominations: $50, $100, $500, and $1,000

Issue Price: 100 and Accrued Interest, Income Return 5½% per Annum

The proceeds of the Loan will be used to pay indebtedness incurred, and to meet expenditure to be made in connection with demobilization (including the authorized war service grants to our soldiers, land settlement loans, and other purposes connected with their re-establishment in civil life), for capital outlay upon shipbuilding, and other national undertakings forming part of Canada's industrial reconstruction programme, and for the establishment of any necessary credits for the purchase of grain, foodstuffs, timber and other products, and will be spent wholly in Canada.

Payment to be made as follows: 20% January 9th, 1920. 80% on application: 30% February 10th, 1920; 50% December 9th, 1919; 30% March 10th, 1920.

The last payment of 31.21% covers 30% of the principal and 1.21% representing accrued interest at 5½% from November 1st to date of the respective instalment.

A full half-year's interest will be paid on May 1st, 1920, making the cost of the bonds 100 and interest. Subscriptions may be paid in full at the time of application at 100 without interest, or on any instalment due date thereafter, together with accrued interest at the rate of 5½% per annum.

This Loan is authorized under Act of the Parliament of Canada, and both principal and interest are a charge upon the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

The amount of this issue is $300,000,000, exclusive of the amount (if any) paid for by the surrender of bonds of previous issues. The Minister of Finance, however, reserves the right to allot the whole or any part of the amount subscribed in excess of $300,000,000.

Payments

All cheques, drafts, etc., covering instalments are to be made payable to the Credit of the Minister of Finance. Failure to pay any instalment when due will render previous payments liable to forfeiture, and the allotment to cancellation. Subscriptions other than those paid in full on application must be accompanied by a deposit of 10% of the amount subscribed. Official Canvassers will forward subscriptions or any branch in Canada of any Chartered Bank will accept subscriptions and issue receipts.

Subscriptions may be paid in full at time of application at 100 without interest, or on any instalment due date thereafter, together with accrued interest to time of making payment in full. Under this provision, payment of subscriptions may be made as follows:

If paid in full on or before November 15th, 1919, par without interest or 100%.
If remaining instalments paid on Dec. 9th, 1919, balance of 90% and interest ($90.52 per $100).
If remaining instalments paid on Jan. 9th, 1920, balance of 70% and interest ($70.84 per $100).
If remaining instalments paid on Feb. 10th, 1920, balance of 50% and interest ($51.08 per $100).
If remaining instalment paid on Mar. 9th, 1920, balance of 30% and interest ($31.21 per $100).
Payment of instalments or payment in full after November 15th, 1919, can be made only on an instalment due date.

Denomination and Registration

Bearer bonds, with coupons, will be issued in denomination of $50, $100, $500, and $1,000, and may be registered as to principal. The first coupon attached to these bonds will be due on May 1st, 1920. Fully registered bonds, the interest on which is paid direct to the owner by Government cheque, will be issued in denominations of $500, $1,000, $5,000, $10,000, $25,000, $50,000, $100,000, or any multiple of $100,000.

Payment of Interest

A full half-year's interest at the rate of 5½% per annum will be paid May 1st, 1920.

Form of Bond and Delivery

Subscribers must indicate on their applications the form of bond and the denominations required, and the securities so indicated will be delivered by the bank upon payment of subscriptions in full.

Bearer bonds of this issue will be available for delivery at the time of application to subscribers desirous of making payment in full. Bonds registered as to principal only, or fully registered as to principal and interest, will be delivered to subscribers making payment in full, as soon as the required registration can be made.

Payment of all instalments must be made at the bank originally named by the subscriber. Non-negotiable receipts will be furnished to all subscribers who desire to pay by instalments. These receipts will be exchangeable at subscriber's bank for bonds on any instalment date when subscription is paid in full. All receipts must be exchanged before 1st June, 1920.

Form of Bonds Interchangeable

Subject to the payment of 25 cents for each new bond issued, holders of fully registered bonds without coupons will have the right to convert into bonds with coupons, and holders of bonds with coupons will have the right to convert into fully registered bonds without coupons, at any time, on application to the Minister of Finance or any Assistant Receiver General.

Forms of application may be obtained from any Official Canvasser, from any Victory Loan Committee, or member thereof, or from any branch in Canada of any Chartered Bank.

Subscription Lists will close on or before November 15th, 1919

Keep Canada's Farms and Factories Busy

Danish Dairying.

In view of the fact that the people of the United Kingdom have accustomed themselves to eating margarine instead of butter during the war, Danish dairymen expect that the butter exports to the United Kingdom in the future will be only a fraction of what they were prior to the war. At the present moment the production of butter is down to 16,000 cwts. (112 lbs.) weekly as compared with 33,636 cwts. weekly before the war.

One result of the foregoing circumstances is that the Federation of Danish Dairies has turned its attention to the export of new milk to the neighboring countries lying to the northeast, east, and south of Denmark. During the last five or six years the sale of cream in Denmark has undergone a peaceful revolution through the introduction of homogenized sterilized cream in bottles. The cream is passed through a machine which homogenizes it—i.e., breaks the fat globules in the milk into atomic fragments that are so small that they no longer float to the surface but become an integral part of the milk. The homogenized cream is then bottled and sterilized at a high temperature for fifteen minutes in an autoclave. Cream treated in this manner keeps for an unlimited period.

The Busy Queen Bee.

The queen bee will lay from 2,000 to 3,000 eggs daily in the season. The queen bee always heads the bees when they issue to swarm.

Victory Loan Notes

Reports from headquarters in Toronto are most optimistic. Mr. C. H. Burgess of the Ontario Special Subscriptions Committee, wires: "All conservative feeling about this loan seem gone. Campaign has opened with the smash of success. Returns so far amazing. Early hours of campaign. Waterloo, Peel, Dufferin, Dundas, Stormont and Glengarry and entire Lake Huron division have exceeded objectives. Mr. Gordon T. Finch, vice Chairman of the Ontario Employees' Committee in a telegram also says: "They are off to a good start. Twenty-one firms in Ontario before noon were displaying their honor banners. Hope all establishments in Hastings will be in same class real soon."

A POLISH LEADER.

Josef Pilsudski Has Been Appointed Provisional President.

Josef Pilsudski, lately appointed Provisional President of Poland by the Regency Council, figure of mystery in many Polish revolutionary attempts and hero of the people, has lived a Graustarkian life, overfilled with bewildering political adventure from early boyhood until his choice to lead Poland the new.

Pilsudski was born in Lithuania Poland in 1867. His father had suffered bitter persecution for his part in the revolution of 1863. The son thus inherits the mantle of revolutionary leadership. He has never shirked the responsibilities of this leadership, whether against Russian or German oppressors.

Josef Pilsudski studied at the gymnasium in Vilna and the University of Petrograd. He was implicated in the attempt made on the life of Czar Alexander III. on March 2, 1888, because of his acquaintance with Denbo, Preker and others, who had planned it. Although he was opposed to terrorism, and was only called as a witness, he was exiled to Siberia for five years. He was sent to Tanka where he felt ill. It was there he came to know the Russian spirit thoroughly.

In 1892 he returned to Vilna. On his way to Siberia the soldiers insulted one of the women political prisoners and the political started trouble. In the riot between them and the soldiers, the political were badly beaten. Pilsudski always referred to this experience as the most horrible in his life.

On his return he characterized the Russians as "anarchists in spirit and incapable of republicanism." He got in touch with Polish leaders, among them Roman Dmowski, then a National Democrat, and with the Socialist Poles. These he called "romanticists in their plans, but positivists in action."

Pilsudski lived openly in Poland until July, 1894, when he decided to take up definitely political work. He started Robotnik, a secret organ of the Polish Socialist party. The printing press was hidden in Vilna.

The small press was bought in London by Debek, now editor of the New York Polish Daily Telegram. Its parts were sent through to Poland as agricultural machinery. This was alone made possible because the Russian customs official on the frontier worked with the Polish revolutionists. The press was put together in a small house in Vilna. Only four people knew the place, Sukiewicz, Pilsudski, Wojciechowski and Debek. Outsiders knew only that Pilsudski would arrive without warning, bringing stacks of literature, and then disappear with a little warning.

He was a man of mystery. The press was not discovered for ten years, despite great police endeavors. Pilsudski meanwhile traveled over Poland and Russia, organizing circles for the education of workmen and of the intellectuals. His pseudonym was Victor. In these travels he scattered his name.

At the time of the Russian War the press was moved to Cracow. Pilsudski married secretly a young student in Petrograd.

In 1896 the printing press was moved to Lodz, Poland. More people were introduced into the organization. One man was shadowed, and the press was finally discovered. Pilsudski was arrested.

Friends determined to bring about his escape. Escape from the clutches of Warsaw was impossible. Pilsudski suggested that he simulate insanity and so obtain transfer to the insane asylum at Tworka. Books on the subject were smuggled in to enable him to practice the symptoms. He played the part for a long time, and was on the verge of giving it up when the transfer was announced. But the police were afraid to send him to any Polish hospital.

He was sent to the Asylum of Nicholas the Miracle Maker, in Petrograd. Here a young doctor, Wladislaw Mazurkiewicz, immediately made application for entrance. He was accepted, and on May 13, 1901, he simply walked out with Pilsudski. Pilsudski then fled to London, his wife accompanying him.

In the spring of 1902 Pilsudski returned to Poland. With the outbreak of the Japanese War he planned a revolution in Poland. He went to Japan to negotiate for help from Japan, passing through New York. Debek was already here. Roman Dmowski also made the trip to Japan, for the Japanese wanted to have more than one opinion on the question. Dmowski was opposed to such appeal.

Until Jan. 15, 1915, Pilsudski had refused to take money from the Austrian authorities. He, officers and soldiers subsisted on money collected by the revolutionary organization. Small sums were raised by various means—part of his plan to show Austria that he did not need her help. But complications forced him to accept the aid.

When his beloved Poland was finally cleared of the last Russian soldier, Pilsudski turned his attention toward the still more difficult task of forcing out the Germans and the Austrians, with whom hitherto he had made common cause. This conflict brought him into a German prison fortress, from which he has only recently been freed.

The Raven's Warning.

Tradition has it that all the calamities which dog the footsteps of the ill-fated Austrian royal family are foreshadowed by the appearance of a raven.

When the Archduke Maximilian departed for Mexico—and execution—a raven followed him on the path; and when the Archduchess Christina left for her unhappy life in Spain a raven hovered over the carriage.

A whole flight of ravens is said to have hovered over the crowning of the late Francis Joseph, and one of the ill-omened birds dashed a peach from the hands of the Empress Elizabeth the day before she was murdered at Geneva.—Tit-Bits.
